Auto Practically Demolished and Men and Women Injured When Branch of Tree Falls.

MRS. ERNEST HUGULEY
REMOVED TO HOSPITAL

Husband, Son and Guests Are Given First-Aid Treatment and Then Allowed to Go Home.

Five persons were injured in a wind and rainstorm that swept through the city of Decatur about 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon, when a touring car of Ernest E. Huguley, of Kirkwood, was struck by a large branch falling from a tree when hit by lightning, as the car neared Church street on Ponce de Leon avenue.

The injured, who were occupants of the wrecked machine, were Mr. and Mrs. Ernest E. Huguley, of 50 Southerland avenue, Kirkwood; Clinton Huguley, 16-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Huguley; Mrs. Elsie Mott Williams, of Kirkwood, and Miss Ruby Ruffner, also of Kirkwood.

Mrs. Huguley sustained severe injuries about the head. Attending physicians at St. Joseph's infirmary state that her injuries, although serious, will not prove fatal. Mrs. Williams suffered a fractured thigh and her throat was badly bruised when the heavy limb struck her. Miss Ruffner was painfully hurt about the face.

Mr. Huguley received facial injuries and body bruises, and Clinton Huguley, who was driving the car, sustained a painfully lacerated leg.

Mr. Huguley is president of the Huguley Oil company, well known wholesale dealers in oils and paints, on Madison avenue. He and the other occupants of the car had attended a matinee performance in Atlanta and upon returning to Kirkwood, decided to go to Decatur before putting the car in the garage for the night.

As the machine passed directly underneath a huge tree overshadowing the street, a stroke of lightning broke the limb from its trunk, and it crashed into the automobile. Mr. and Mrs. Huguley were rendered unconscious. The other occupants of the car, which was badly damaged, summoned help, and they were removed to the residence of Ernest Ramspeck for first aid treatment.

From the Ramspeck residence the victims, with the exception of Mrs. Williams, were removed to St. Joseph's infirmary. Mrs. Williams was taken to the Moncrief sanitarium. After their wounds were dressed Mr. Huguley and his son were permitted to return home. Mrs. Huguley underwent an operation last Saturday night.

M'ADOO SHOWS
NO CONCERN
OVER VOTING

Huntington, N. Y., July 3.—William Gibbs McAdoo tonight apparently was unconcerned with what was going on at the San Francisco convention. He attended a Shakespearean pageant at the Conkling estate and on his return to his home again declined to discuss politics for publication.

During the afternoon and evening friends in New York kept him informed by telephone of the balloting. Other happenings at the convention were supplied by newspaper men who were invited by Mr. McAdoo.

There were several callers during the afternoon among them Byron R. Newton, collector of the city of New York, and Mrs. Newton. Oscar Price, a friend, remained at the McAdoo home all day.

Mr. McAdoo got up about 9 o'clock this morning and after going through his personal correspondence read the platform of the morning newspapers. His friends say they have reason to assume he is pleased with the platform. Mr. McAdoo, it is said, did not get news of the two ballots taken by the convention last night, until he read the papers this morning.

DUTCH VOTE TO LEND
GERMANY $80,000,000

The Hague, July 3.—Although some Dutch mercantile interests entered objections, the second chamber of parliament by acclamation today approved a government loan to Germany amounting to 200,000,000 guilders (normally about $100,000,000). The ministers have been assured that the allies will enter no objections to the loan.

Rumors at Convention That Wilson Had Named Choice of Candidates Denied by Tumulty.

PRESIDENT PREDICTS
DEMOCRATIC VICTORY

Following Vision of Nation's Founders in Promising World Leadership of United States, He Says.

Washington, July 3.—President Wilson has not expressed an opinion to any one with reference to a particular candidate for the presidency, said a statement issued at the white house tonight by Secretary Tumulty.

The statement denied emphatically rumors which it was said the white house was informed were being circulated in San Francisco, and which it was said were to the effect that the president had expressed a preference as to the party's candidate.

Statement by Tumulty.

The statement as issued at the white house said:

"When a report was brought to Secretary Tumulty's attention of rumors being circulated in San Francisco that the president had expressed an opinion with reference to a particular candidate he made the following statement:

"This is news to me. I had discussed all phases of this convention with the president, and had been in intimate touch with him during its continuance, and I am positive that he has not expressed an opinion to any one with reference to a particular candidate for the presidency. It has always been his policy to refrain from taking any stand that might be construed as dictation."

President Wilson tonight replied to an opinion to any one with reference to the democratic national convention. He said that the republic who promised the world the counsel and leadership of the free people of the United States and matters that affected human liberty and the justice of law.

"That promise we deliberately renewed when we entered the great war for human freedom and we now keep faith with those who died in Flanders' fields to redeem it. That I should have been accorded leadership in such great matters fills my heart with gratitude and pride and the course the party has taken since the war is vindicated and the world convinced not only of our strength and prowess, but of our integrity and our devotion to the highest ideals."

"This is a conquering purpose and nothing can defeat it."

SPECTACULAR DRIVE FOR COX A FAILURE

Tammany, Illinois and Other "Wets" Could Not Muster Enough Votes to Push Governor Across Line.

BY JAMES A. HOLLOMON,
Special Staff Correspondent.

San Francisco, July 3.—The feature of the final hour of the convention tonight was an attempt on the part of the Georgia delegation to start a drive for McAdoo when the Empire State shifted her 28 votes from Palmer to the former secretary of the treasury.

This was the first break in the Georgia ranks, and upon the apparent failure of the McAdoo supporters to take any real advantage of the shift, Georgia's votes again swung solidly into the Palmer column.

San Francisco, Cal., July 3.—Despite the rumors to the contrary that flashed through the lobbies during the night and early today, William G. McAdoo, of New York, declined to say the necessary word to this pro-administration democratic convention that would have nominated him for the presidency today by the seventh ballot at the outside. More than two hundred delegates from various states in the south and central west stubbornly refused to vote for him unless he declared aggressively that he desired the honor and would carry the party standard accordingly.

Forced a Recess.

As a consequence, when a combination of the anti-Cox forces in the convention forced a recess at 5:30 p. m. until 8 o'clock in the evening, it was for the purpose of the ultra administration forces, represented by the McAdoo, Palmer and before unyielding "favorite son" groups, to concentrate upon a man with whom to break the deadlock that had been precipitated by the failure of McAdoo to come to his own rescue and also by the failure of the "wet" states, led by New York and Illinois, to drive Cox to the goal.

The record of John W. Davis on woman suffrage, destroyed his chances of becoming the dark horse as was planned during the recess.

Counter efforts were made in the nineteenth ballot by their supporters to drive Cox and McAdoo across the majority line as a test.

The drive for Cox, led by Tammany, was one of the most spectacular in the history of national conventions, and yet, with the mighty force of the heavy voting states, the Ohio governor could not be pushed across the majority line, to say nothing of acquiring the requisite two-thirds.

Palmer Line Held Strong.

The Palmer line held strong and fast until Illinois joined with Tammany on the wet issue in the effort to kick the goal with Cox. Iowa then falling away from Palmer under the unit rule and going for Cox. Still the Palmer line held with hopes of the Pennsylvania swinging back into the game before the finish.

Then Tennessee broke to Davis and quickly it was realized that the grade can be attributed only to McAdoo himself, and while it was believed he coveted the nomination, he was not willing to make the sacrifice to accept it.

Over six inches of rain fell within a few hours, and the damage to property is estimated at not less than half a million dollars.

Leading the Field at Frisco

GOVERNOR JAMES M. COX

James Middleton Cox was three times governor of Ohio—an honor enjoyed by only one other Ohioan, Rutherford B. Hayes.

Born on a farm, educated in the public schools, a printer's devil, a school teacher, a newspaper reporter, a private secretary to a congressman, owner, manager and proprietor of two newspapers, member of congress for three years and three times governor of his state is his record to date.

Business success paralleled his political achievements and through his own efforts Cox has amassed a fortune. Mr. Cox became the leader of the democratic party in Ohio in 1912, when he was nominated for governor. As one who had brought radical changes in the state constitution, he took the field in its behalf. His first term as governor was devoted chiefly to forwarding the enactment of laws to put the new state constitution into effect.

But Ohio evidently was not prepared to assimilate all the new laws, for Cox was defeated for re-election. But his party renominated him in 1916 and he was re-elected for a third term in 1918, being the only democrat to win in Ohio.

Legislation for which Governor Cox is best known includes a model workmen's compensation law and a child labor law, which have been extensively copied by other states. Educators of the country say the Ohio school code, enacted under Governor Cox's direction, will live as a monument to his achievements.

Mr. Cox was born in Butler county, Ohio, in 1870. He attended district school and held his first position as a teacher of the school in which he took his first lessons. He spent evenings and holidays in a printing office. In a few years he received his first assignment on the editorial staff of The Cincinnati Enquirer.

After ten years with The Enquirer, he went to Washington as a private secretary to Congressman Paul Sore of Ohio. At the close of this service, he purchased The Dayton Daily News, borrowing most of the money to pay for it. Later he purchased the Springfield Daily News. He was first elected to congress in 1908.

He recently purchased the farm near Jacksonburg upon which he was born, and is making it into a modern farm home where he expects to live on retirement from public office. He married and has four children.

GEORGIA DELEGATION
TRIED M'ADOO SWING

State's Votes Given to Native Son on 21st Ballot, But Slide Did Not Result, and Delegation Returned to Palmer.

Auditorium, San Francisco, July 3.—After twenty-two fruitless ballots, the democratic national convention just before midnight gave up hopes of selecting a presidential nominee within the first week of its session and adjourned until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Repeated attempts to adjourn were defeated throughout the early part of the night, but as midnight approached and it was about to become Sunday, the tradition that a democratic national convention never works on a Sunday, coupled with the fact that the convention was tired, worn and frazzled, had its effect, and the final motion to adjourn was unopposed.

When the convention stopped Cox was leading with 430, McAdoo came next with 372½.

Palmer was down to 166½.

The final ballots of the night were full of McAdoo, but it failed to make much headway. Georgia, his home state, pledged to Palmer, swung over with her 28 votes in a block for one ballot to see if it would start her native son toward victory, but it failed to do so, and she swung back to the attorney general.

No dark horse appeared during the night's balloting to carry off the honors, and the convention adjourned just as much in need of somebody to rally about as it was when it began the balloting.

It was in a deadlock with nobody in sight to break it. Sunday will be devoted to efforts to finding somebody to whom the convention can swing.

DESPERATE SCENE
DURING RECESS

Leading Candidates Frantically Try to Win More Support, While Dark Horses Stamp and Rear for Word "Go."

Auditorium, San Francisco, July 3.—The Cox, McAdoo and Palmer forces and those hoping to develop a dark horse, spent the hours between recess and reassembling at 8 p. m. tonight in hurried conferences and desperate efforts to line up a compromise ticket. Word from Washington that President Wilson was pursuing a "hands-off" policy added to the confusion of the situation.

To every argument advanced for some dark horse, objections were heard in opposition. Those opposed to Cox argued the Ohio governor had reached the maximum of his strength and lost his opportunity when the suspension of the balloting was permitted for the recess. McAdoo and Palmer forces were importuned by each other to find a way to stop him.

Despite the statement of some administration leaders that it cannot "go to Cox," the Cox forces pointed out that the dark horse movement had found no rallying point and that Cox still remained a potential force which from a small number at the start had taken the lead in the balloting and nosed McAdoo out of first place.

McAdoo supporters had a conference and, according to their announcement, decided to "stand pat."

McAdoo Does Not Want Nomination
Declares Upshaw

Georgia Congressman Tells of Interview He Recently Held With Former Secretary of the Treasury.

Reluctance that has been shown by William Gibbs McAdoo to allow his name presented as a candidate for president in the San Francisco convention, has been largely explained in a statement made by the former secretary of the treasury, who expressed himself to Congressman William D. Upshaw, of Georgia, as being satisfied with his public career and wishing now to remain in private life, with his family.

"Upshaw," said Mr. McAdoo, "it seems utterly impossible to make the public understand how I feel about this matter. I am tired. I am absolutely satisfied with holding public office. I long for home life with my family, and the privileges of being a private citizen."

These are the words attributed to former Secretary McAdoo, who received Congressman Upshaw in his New York office the first of last week, and who spent more than a half hour with the Georgia representative, talking over various matters of a political nature.

GORGAS ANSWERS
DEATH SUMMONS

Major General, Former Surgeon General and Famous Military Medical Expert, Native Southerner, Dies in London.

London, July 4.—Major General William C. Gorgas, former surgeon general of the United States army, died at an early hour this morning.

He was unconscious much of the time for the last few days, according to the hospital attendants, and was not even able to recognize Mrs. Gorgas or Brigadier General Noble, the only American present at the end. It was stated by General Noble that Bright's disease (nephritis) was the immediate cause of death.

Virtually from the middle of June hope was abandoned for the general's recovery. He arrived in London from New York on May 19, seemingly in vigorous health. The following day he left with General Noble and Mrs. Gorgas for Brussels, where he was decorated by King Albert. From Brussels he proceeded to Coblenz, and returned to London on May 29.

On the morning of May 30, he suffered a stroke of apoplexy, and was removed to Queen Alexandra hospital, where his death occurred.

New York, July 3.—The first of the "friendly visitors" from American churches to the churches of Europe sailed from New York today. Their mission is to strengthen the ties of international friendship between the churches and "to try to restore the shattered confidence of the people in the sincerity of our American ideals."

Reverend Arthur I. Brown, chairman of the federal council's committee on fraternal relations, carries the message of American friendship to the churches of France, Hungary, Italy and Switzerland. Charles V. Vickrey, secretary of the Near East relief, will visit the churches of Armenia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Hungary, Greece, France and England. Reverend Charles S. MacFarland, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, also will visit Belgium, France, Switzerland, Italy and Holland. Reverend William P. Merrill, of New York, goes to England, France and Switzerland. Other prominent clergymen will soon sail on similar errands.

Tentative Settlement De-

Made at Conference of
and Belgian Delegates.

Brussels, July 3.—(By the Associated Press.)—An agreement has virtually been reached by the allied premiers in conference here with regard to the division of German reparations on the basis of 52 per cent to France, 22 per cent to Great Britain, 10 per cent to Italy, 8 per cent to Belgium, and 5 per cent to Serbia, it was stated here today.

The remaining 3 per cent will be divided among the other allies, including Roumania, Portugal and Japan. Italy also will receive certain economic and financial advantages.

This tentative settlement was declared to have been arrived at in a conference of the French, British, Italian and Belgian delegates.

German War Guilt.
The allied conference agreed today upon a plan to consider anew at the Spa meeting the question of German war guilt.

The full supreme council has not as yet passed upon the allied question of German war guilt, but in well-informed circles it is considered that the prospects are bright for a definite early settlement on the basis given. Italy, in consideration of reducing her claim, would get special consideration in the distribution of coal, as well as economic advantages. It is also proposed that Great Britain guarantee Italy's debt to the United States.

The supreme council convened in full session at 3:30 o'clock to finish with the disarmament question and adopt a method of procedure for the Spa conference. At the close of this session, the final one of the Brussels conference, it was announced that the first compact of the entire treaty of Versailles will take place on Monday as scheduled at the Villa Farnesina at 11 a. m.

No Change for Treaty.
Premier de Lathoussier, Belgium, will preside. The order of business has not been disclosed, but the session probably will be opened with the presentation of the allied delegates of a list of the clauses of the treaty that Germany has not fulfilled. The discussion is expected to begin with the Germans' explanation of their failure to meet their obligations.

The conference adjourned without finally deciding on the proportion of shares of the reparations. It is understood that the conference will continue tomorrow.

Premier Lloyd-George, talking to representatives of the Belgian press this evening, said the Germans at Spa would not be allowed to discuss the merits of the treaty of Versailles, but simply the means of its execution. He declared the Versailles treaty "would never be regarded as a scrap of paper."

and Train Goes Through Bridge Near Iowa Town.

Saratoga, Pa., June 3.—In a collision between three cars on the Lackawanna and Wyoming Valley railroad near South Pittston Station at 7:30 o'clock tonight, eighteen people are reported killed and 100 injured. The accident occurred near South Pittston when lightning struck a telegraph pole along the track and the pole fell over on the tracks in front of a car bound for Saratoga.

A moment later a limited car crashed into the rear of the car that struck the pole, and a third car telescoped the second car. All three cars were piled in a heap. Many of those killed and injured had attended the annual games of the Caledonian clubs of Saratoga and Pittston at Valley View park this afternoon.

Most of the injured have been taken to the state hospital at Pittston. 8 DEAD, 30 INJURED

That Georgia, in so far as he and his followers can control, will not be bound by the San Francisco convention nor respect either the platform or the nominees, is the declaration made by Thomas E. Watson in this week's issue of The Columbia Sentinel. In a signed two-column double headed statement on the first page of the paper, under the caption, "Georgia Unrepresented at the National Democratic Convention," he says:

"The gentlemen who call themselves Palmer delegates represent nobody but themselves. How can any unprejudiced person say that they have the right to represent the state of Georgia? They have no such right and no such pretension will be recognized. The state of Georgia will not be bound by what the national convention does. The state of Georgia has been insulted and outwaded by the San Francisco convention, following the unanimous recommendation of the

NITRATE SITUATION IN CHILE IMPROVES

Santiago, Chile, July 3.—The critical situation created by the main industry of Chile has been considerably bettered this year and the Nitrate Producers' association has exported already 55,000 tons of nitrate against a production of only 55,000 tons, which means that most of the surplus that could not be placed last year has found an easy market. The price of nitrate of soda has also increased considerably. The prosperity of this industry means for Chile solid financial situation of the government, abundance of work for laborers and general welfare of the country. The reverse was experienced last year when there was no market for nitrate.

6,000 ATLANTANS VISIT LAKEWOOD

Fourth of July Celebration Is Also Staged for Monday With Races and Other Attractions.

In spite of the rain, more than six thousand people visited Lakewood park Saturday to celebrate the first lap of this year's disconnected Fourth of July observance. The Fourth, falling on Sunday, has made it rather difficult to celebrate it in the real old-fashioned way, but the management of Lakewood park has cared for that by staging a dual celebration on Saturday.

Many new attractions have been added to the midway, and the swings and the greyhound were kept constantly running Saturday. Thousands of people from the surrounding country were there, and also others from Atlanta who took advantage of their Saturday half-holiday to get away from the warmth of the city.

The program Saturday was the same as it will be Monday. All the amusement attractions were open, and the races were run, despite the frequent interruptions by the rain. Only two events were omitted—the 10 and 15-mile motorcycle dashes. About two thousand people were in the grandstand, while additional numbers thronged the fences while the races were in progress.

The fireworks at night were staged across the lake from the grandstand. Set pieces of a patriotic nature and other beautiful displays were shown. This feature was under the supervision of experts sent here by the factory.

Monday will see the inauguration of the "500,000 population movement" when a huge block of granite will be dedicated to the movement. A bronze tablet will be placed at the base of the column, telling the purpose of the movement.

Scores of children from the orphanages of Atlanta and vicinity were the guests of the park management Saturday. All soldiers in uniform were also admitted free of charge.

GORGAS ANSWERS DEATH SUMMONS

For a time there was hope of his recovery, but kidney complications developed. The body will be removed to the United States on board an American transport, the time of sailing, however, has not yet been announced.

Famous Medical Man.

General Gorgas was considered one of the world's foremost authorities on military medicine and surgery. He fought and defeated the malarial mosquito in Panama and thus made possible the building of that great waterway. He dislodged yellow fever from its century-old stronghold in Havana and, under the direction of the United States government and the Rockefeller foundation, supervised campaigns against that dread disease in Central America, Peru and Ecuador.

At the invitation of the British government, he went to South Africa in 1913 to establish sanitary conditions in the Rand, as a result of which he received high honors from the medical profession in London, and Oxford university conferred a degree upon him.

In the last ten years his services were sought to give battle to plagues in many parts of the world. When the typhus epidemic began in Serbia in the war, an effort was made to have him undertake the campaign against it, but at that time he was needed to direct the medical and surgical work for the American army in France.

Decorated by France.

He was decorated by the French government and made a commander of the Legion of Honor and knighted by King George of England, the latter for, as the king expressed it, to him, making possible the construction of the great canal.

In the days of the old French company which attempted to build the canal, tropical diseases annually claimed one-fourth of all its workers. The French were powerless before this pestilence. When General Gorgas became general sanitary officer of the canal commission, the annual death toll had been reduced, but it was still difficult to obtain the vast army of workmen necessary and to care for those disabled by malaria, yellow fever and dysentery.

In nine years a systematic campaign for the destruction of the mosquito, General Gorgas virtually drove the diseases from the isthmus. When he gave up the work to accept the post of surgeon general in the army in 1914, deaths among the canal workers had been reduced to 5 per thousand annually. Congress, in recognition of his achievement, made him a major general, and the world has hailed him as one of the great men of medical science. In recognition of his services he was made a member of the Isthmian commission and served as such until he was made surgeon general. His work in combating yellow fever in Havana began when he went to Cuba with the rank of major in the Spanish war. When the war ended he remained as sanitary officer of the island. Havana had been for more than a century the focus of yellow fever infection for all of the northern hemisphere. When he left Cuba in 1902 the island had been cleaned up and Havana

First Presbyterian.

The sentiment of July Fourth, as a day of providential significance in the history of our country will pervade the program at the First Presbyterian church Sunday. Dr. J. Spruille Lyons will be assisted in the service by Rev. S. Brown Hoyt, of Newport News, Va. He will speak upon "Christian Citizenship."

The musical part of the program will include Kipling's "Recessional" as well as other inspiring numbers, and at the close of the worship the organ will render "The Marseillaise" and "The Star-Spangled Banner," the congregation remaining standing.

Hunter To Make Race For 5th Ward Council.

Poster L. Hunter will make the race for council from the Fifth Ward against J. A. Couch. Mr. Hunter makes the following statement concerning his candidacy: "My friends have urged me to make the race for council, I having been a resident of the Fifth Ward all my life and being quite familiar with the needs of this ward and of the city at large. I have consented to make the race. My purpose in seeking this position is that I may use my efforts to secure better schools, and to secure better streets by getting down unsanitary movements which will not crumple to pieces in a year or two after their completion. I will endeavor to see that all money spent for improvements for the city shall be spent for substantial and permanent improvements. I am making this race for the long term, and will appreciate the support and influence of the Fifth Ward voters, securing them that, if elected, I will see to the best of my ability not only their interests, but the interests of the city at large."

FOSTER L. HUNTER.

where previously from 200 to 1,200 had annually succumbed to yellow fever, since has been virtually free from the disease.

At Sea, Guayaquil. While in the canal zone, General Gorgas visited Guayaquil and mapped out a plan to rid that city, long known as the "pesthole of the Pacific," from the yellow fever scourge, and his plan was in process of execution when the great war began.

Soon after the United States entered the world war General Gorgas announced the organization of the extensive system devised for the "reconstruction" for soldiers crippled in the war, which included the establishment of convalescent hospitals behind the lines in France, reconstruction hospitals in the great centers of America and the retaining of crippled men and preparation for resuming their vocations or learning new ones.

General Gorgas reached the age limit while still on duty in France in 1918. When the war was over he was retired from active service in the army. Subsequently in 1919 he was head of the yellow fever commission organized by the Rockefeller foundation and in that capacity made an extensive tour of Central and South America to direct the work of eradicating yellow fever from some of its breeding centers, notably in Peru and Ecuador. King George of England conferred red upon him in June, 1920, the decoration of knight commander of the Order of Saint Michael and Saint George.

General Gorgas was born in Mobile, Ala., October 2, 1854, the son of a confederate general. He was graduated from the University of the South in 1875. He was appointed a surgeon in the United States army in 1880. While in London in June, 1920, on his way to South Africa to again improve sanitary conditions there, he was taken ill and it was announced that he had previously suffered a stroke of apoplexy.

ATLANTAN IS HELPING CHILDREN OF RUSSIA

That an Atlantan is playing an important role with the American Red Cross in Russia, which is engaged in the effort of reuniting families separated by the great war, has become known through news from Vladivostok that Dr. Hal W. Davidson, of Atlanta, will be one of a colony of a Red Cross group who will sail from that port on July 15 with a colony of nearly 800 Russian children bound for Petrograd, via San Francisco and the Panama canal, returning to mothers, fathers, sisters and brothers from whom they have been separated more than two years.

Another member of the party will be the wife of Dr. Davidson, who was formerly Miss Natalie Beklemisheva, a Russian nurse. The Red Cross has gathered up and colonized thousands of children whom the cruel fates of war tore from their homes, and has undertaken the task of locating their parents or other relatives, if they were spared by the fortunes of the conflict.

Dasher Home Destroyed.

Valdosta, Ga., July 3.—(Special.) The splendid country home of Augustus Dasher, near Bemis, eight miles north of Valdosta, was burned at an early hour Friday morning, together with practically all of its furnishings. From the dwelling the flames spread to the smokehouse, which was also destroyed, but its big stock of meats, lard and other supplies were saved. Mr. Dasher had no insurance. The origin of the fire is a mystery, as there had been no fire in the home since the dinner was cooked on the previous day before.

MORE WATSON VITRIOL.
In his personal publicity organ, "The Columbia Sentinel," issue of July 5, copies of which were on sale on Atlanta street corners last Friday, Thomas E. Watson, erstwhile candidate for president of the United States subject to the recent Georgia presidential preference primary, makes the following statement over his own signature:

"The state of Georgia will not be bound by what the national convention does."

"The state of Georgia has been insulted and outraged by the convention."

"We are neither legally bound to respect its platform nor its nominees."

(Signed)
"THOMAS E. WATSON."

Thus does the turgid "sage of McDuffie" with a dash of his vitriolic pen absolve himself from all allegiance to the democratic party.

When a man, professing to be a member of a political party, declares himself to be "not bound by what the national convention (of that party) does," and not bound "to respect its (that party's) platform nor its nominees," what is he?

God only knows!—certainly he is no longer entitled to profess membership of that party!

"Not bound by what the national convention does?"

"Neither legally bound to respect its platform nor its nominees?"

(The grammar is Watson's, not ours.)

Then by what are the democrats of Georgia "bound," as partisans?

Then what party's platform and nominees are they "bound to respect?"

Even the Watson-Smith coalition delegation to the San Francisco convention, by every one of its spokesmen who appeared in its behalf before the national committee, expressly repudiated the position that Tom Watson has taken.

(And now, if that is to be Watson's attitude, it can mean only one thing: That Tom Watson has spewed himself out of the democratic party—to the party's relief.)

Let him go if it pleases him, into the ranks of the G. O. P.; but as for the state of Georgia, it, and The Constitution assured a few days ago, "is not yet ready to support the republican party under its negro regime in this state, as specifically recognized by the national convention of that party!"

If that is to be his attitude, the state of Georgia will meet it as it has done repeatedly before, and no living man can deliver Georgia to the republican party, particularly after what took place at the recent Chicago convention!

NEWSPRINT HIGH COST.

How the high price of newsprint paper "hits and hurts" all around—from the city dailies to the country weekly newspapers—is shown in this paragraph from the Tifton (Ga.) Gazette:

"During the past week, the Gazette has paid out over $500 to be exact, $527.56, for newsprint paper. And that is less than three months' supply. A few years ago, that money would have paid for enough paper to last a year. Although newspapers get more money for what they have to sell, it is costing a great deal more to produce it. And the advance in price of newsprint is no greater in proportion than the advance in all other things going to make a newspaper."

That's the far-reaching all-affecting newspaper situation.

Here and there, throughout the country there are papers that have been forced to suspend because of it.

But while it has fallen heavily on all publishers of newspapers, it has brought into clearer light than ever, the loyalty of the people to their home papers.

They are standing by them, as they should, and aiding their editors in keeping their home papers up to the high-water mark.

The Georgia weeklies are "pulling through" in pretty good shape, and the smaller dailies show a splendid advertising patronage.

And the people, in thus standing by their home newspapers, are helping themselves and the towns in whose upbuilding a live daily or weekly newspaper takes the leading part.

THE PLATFORM.

The platform adopted by the national democratic convention at San Francisco is in all essentials the strongest, most sanely progressive declaration of principles upon which any political party ever predicated an appeal for the suffrage of the American people.

In it, from beginning to end, there are no wasted words, no platitudes, no meaningless rhetorical flourishes; not a clause nor phrase that is ambiguous or that adapts itself to alternative interpretation.

Every plank in it rings like a bell—rings resonantly with the true principles of true democracy.

Every sentence is sharply pointed, and cuts cleanly like a sharp steel blade. Running throughout the entire document, like a thread of gold, and clearly discernible to the mind of the reader, though unwritten, is the fundamental democratic principle of "equal rights for all; special privileges for none!"

This platform, very appropriately, and as was to have been assumed from the day of the president's final return from Versailles, places the league of nations principle to the front as the paramount issue upon which the 1920 presidential campaign will be contested.

And it dispels the last vestige of doubt as to the democratic party's standing strongly, aggressively, untidily and confidently behind the Woodrow Wilson administration—a fact that is only emphasized by the degree of enthusiasm and unanimity in which the convention expressed its approval of it.

The convention did right in repelling all attempts to insert in the platform, a plank bearing upon liquor prohibition.

Prohibition is a dead issue; it is incorporated in the fundamental law of the land. The democratic party's attitude toward it is well known; and for this convention to have projected it into the campaign by a platform declaration, either favorable or otherwise, would have been to have questioned the attitude of the American masses upon a question that now only involves respect for and enforcement of the law.

By omitting a "prohibition plank" the convention only in that measure intensified public interest in the paramount issue—that of the peace treaty and league of nations. And it has made certain the submission of the league of nations question to that "solemn referendum" that was bespoken by President Wilson in his Jackson day letter to the democratic party.

The platform utterances with reference to each of the questions of major importance in the affairs of our government—such, for example, as the attitude of the government toward the country's agricultural and industrial interests; the railroads; labor; disabled soldiers, sailors and marines; highway and waterways development; reclamation of waste lands; the "high cost of living" problem; Mexico; our insular possessions, etc.—are uniformly progressive, fair and broadly constructive.

It is a structure that commends itself to reason, to patriotic sentiment, to American thought; and that, from every angle, presents a solid and formidable front challenging attack by the forces of predatory privilege, the forces of evil, and of every enemy of good government.

FOR BETTER FARMING.

While the scarcity of farm labor is retarding the making of the crops, in the very best crop-making weather, the Cordele (Ga.) Dispatch thinks that it may later prove a blessing to the farmers.

Because of this scarcity—the old type of field labor—the Dispatch glimpses a better day ahead for Georgia farmers:

"Farming by machinery will bridge over all the labor shortage and put us on an equal cost basis with the west. That day is near, and the transition will bring great wealth to one of the best agricultural sections in the whole country. We can well afford to give up the negro if it brings us all these improvements."

Farm machinery is coming more and more into use in Georgia and the south at large; and it is pointed out that the steady farming class of the colored farm help that remains in the south, will learn to do farming by machinery, and so fill in for the labor that is gone, or that cannot be procured, except at prices the farmers cannot pay.

The Cordele paper cites this instance of farm machinery achievement elsewhere:

"In the Iowa and Nebraska corn belt one man, a cultivator and four horses plow out and over twenty acres of corn a day. The accomplishment of the one man, his machine and four horses will equal what six to eight hands can do under the Georgia man and mule regime. The passing of cheap farm labor is going to force us to adopt the more economical methods, and when we do, we will look back on the old way and wonder why we had not learned how to farm long ago."

Already many Georgia farmers have adopted those methods, and the greater results they have to show for them, have induced others to follow suit.

Because of the labor shortage, women and children have been working in the Georgia fields, and in many instances, business and professional men of the towns are doing what they can to help, impressed with the importance of standing by the crops at the right time.

Improved farming methods in every department of farm industry are on the way, and it will, indeed, be a better day for the Georgia farmer when he can make up for any labor shortage in that way.

CHARTER REVISION.

The city democratic executive committee has been asked by the city planning committee to make provision for a referendum vote on the proposed new charter for Atlanta at the forthcoming primary election.

In the interests of democratic government that request should be granted.

There is no valid reason why the people of Atlanta should not be permitted to vote on this matter—a matter which is of vital importance to every citizen of the city—and the suggestion that it be placed upon the ballot is one that should appeal favorably to every one, whether he is for or against adoption of the proposed new charter, as an avenue of public expression.

Everybody knows and must admit that something must be done to bring the city of Atlanta up to a modern standard of governmental service to its inhabitants.

Everybody knows, and must admit, a situation that is patent: That Atlanta is suffering, every day of its existence under present conditions, by reason of the inadequacy of its public municipal facilities; that its school system, its hospital and sanitation and water facilities are measuring far and away below requirements; that the condition of its streets is a disgrace, and a source of shame to every citizen who feels a sense of pride in the city.

Atlanta is a great metropolitan city—second in point of population south of the Mason and Dixon line and east of Los Angeles.

And yet it is governed according to village standards of service—necessarily so for the reason that it is operating under a code of organic laws that was adopted at a time, years and years ago, when Atlanta was little more than a village.

That charter may have amply measured up to the requirements of Atlanta during that stage of the city's development, as it was intended to do; but for the Atlanta of today—the big, rich, prosperous, pulsating and expanding Atlanta of today!—to meet its obligations to its inhabitants in conformity with the provisions of that charter is as utterly impossible as it would be for a grown man to make shift with shoes and trousers of the pattern and sizes he wore as a boy.

A change in our fundamental law and in our basic plan of municipal government is imperative.

Whether or not that provided for in the draft of the proposed new charter meets the requirements is a question upon which opinions may differ.

If the proposed charter is what the majority of Atlantans want, or if the majority of Atlanta citizens disapprove it, the facts in the case should be established as soon as possible; and the modern, progressive, democratic method of settling such a question is to submit it to the test of the ballot box.

All that is contemplated in the proposal now before the executive committee is simply a referendum expression on a plan that has been worked out and submitted, after months and weeks of investigation, study and dispassionate and unselfish consideration by a group of citizens who were chosen by, who represent and who are of, the people of Atlanta.

An opportunity for such a referendum expression will, it is to be hoped, be opened to the voters of this city.

Colonel George Bailey is reporting this side-note: "There is a movement on in Los Angeles to fight the 'high cost of living' the people not seeming to understand that voting the democratic ticket will do it."

PRIDE FOR "BOOSTING."

"Georgia is a unique state, and Atlanta, its capital city, is unique among cities."

Which is the verdict of the Memphis, Tenn., Commercial Appeal, expressed in a highly complimentary editorial review of the Book of Georgia, but recently off the press.

What makes our state and city "unique," in The Commercial Appeal's opinion, is the religious loyalty and state and civic pride of our people, and their matchless community "boosting" proclivities.

After felicitating Georgia upon the fact that "its annual production of field crops is enormous," that "Georgia produces an enormous fruit crop every year," and that its "annual output from manufacturing is large," our Tennessee contemporary goes on to say that "a close study of The Book of Georgia—

"produces the impression that Georgia is a state of Georgians. If a man goes to Georgia or goes to Atlanta from another state he quickly seems to throw all of his fortune and all of his strength to Georgia. A man may go from New York or Philadelphia to Atlanta, and in a year or two he is proclaiming the advantages of Atlanta above all the other cities of the south."

"And in running over the list of biographies we find when it was stated that some man was not born in Georgia there is a note of regret on the part of the editor."

True, every word of it, as every Georgian, native or "transplanted," knows.

It is the spirit—the "Georgia spirit" and the "Atlanta spirit"—that supplies the explanation.

That spirit actuates and dominates every Georgian and every Atlantan; it is not only quickly acquired, it is contagious, irresistible.

Let a wide-awake citizen of the north, east or west plant himself in Georgia, and before he realizes it the "spirit gets him," and involuntarily, unconsciously and almost "overnight" he metamorphoses into a full-fledged, ardent and seasoned Georgia "booster"—a development that is only intensified in the case of the "adopted" Atlantan as well as Georgian!

There are two reasons for this: The first is physical, and has to do with the fact that Georgia and Atlanta "have the goods," and present conditions bordering on the ideal for happy, progressive livelihood; the other is psychological, and can be experienced, but not explained!

That other states and communities might profit by lessons to be learned from Georgia's and Atlanta's development, customs, instincts, civic pride and propensities is broadly hinted by our Memphis newspaper friend.

For example, it asserts—

"The people of Memphis might draw inspiration from certain things set forth in The Book of Georgia. The Atlanta citizen does more for Atlanta than we do for Memphis. The Atlanta citizen talks for Atlanta as we should talk for Memphis. The people of Georgia and Atlanta get publicity throughout the nation as the people of Memphis and this territory should get. Atlanta is being advertised by its own people 365 days in the year."

It must be remembered that Atlanta and Georgia enjoy conditions—physical, intellectual and spiritual—which naturally inspire their people to keep on the job of advertising "365 days in the year," and more, were the year longer!

If anybody has his doubts about this—whether he's "from Missouri" or elsewhere—let him come to Georgia and count the days until he becomes as ardent a "booster" as one of our native-born!

Senator Harding seems to be getting dubious already as to the outcome in November. He has asserted that his campaign expenditures would be very light.

The Baltimore American writes of "a king who is a man." Some of them are working for a living now.

A Kansas man has twelve sons at work on his farm. Every day ought to be Father's Day on that acreage.

The Los Angeles earthquake saved the motion picture men the expense of staging one.

Bryan is wearing a new alpaca coat, but he talks through the same old hat.

Did the Missouri delegation have any idea how fragile their Reed was?

The Elwell detectives are now on a bootlegger trail, but that doesn't mean that they'll get anybody "on the hip."

It's a wonder that the office that seeks the man doesn't stumble over him on his doorstep.

Senator Harding must be suffering from "swimming in the head," from running around the leading questions.

THE LAST VISION

BY FRANK L. STANTON

I.

You seek the dim room where I died—

How orderly-serene it looks!

The dreamless pillows, side by side,

The table, with the old, loved books.

No inkstained, littered leaves in view—

Last love songs that I sang to you.

II.

The morning light streams in; the leaves

Lean to the windows as of old,

And every ray of light receives

New glory from your locks of gold.

But one lies on the dreamer's breast,

With farewell, dying kisses blest.

III.

For Death remembers Love, my dear . . .

Divided as the stars you see,

A flower for that remembrance wear—

Even like the last you kissed for me.

Let not one dream of Love depart;

'Tis all of Heaven earth holds, Sweetheart.

IV.

Love's memory make the dim room bright!

Look from the windows to the blue

Of Heaven, and in the lone twilight

God tell the stars to sing to you!

But can they sing a sweeter song

Than this: "I loved you all life long?"

THE FOURTH OF JULY

If I were preaching in a real pulpit and taking a text, I think I would choose the words of the world's greatest teacher.

"Others have labored and ye have entered into their labors." But I must acknowledge that even then my pretext would be that this is the Fourth of July.

Holidays are always testing times for the characters of people. They are days when men are apt to "let go." Released from the limitations of responsibilities and the coercion of the day's task, each one unconsciously answers the probing question, what will he do when he can do what he wants to do?

The national holidays in some real measure reveal the quality of the national spirit. What will the people of a nation do when let loose from the field and factory, office and counting room? What meaning will they give to the days which they have thus marked in their history?

A National Birthday.

This Fourth of July, so radiant on our calendars, is indeed our nation's birthday. All that we have ever accomplished that is worth the doing, all the material wealth that we have ever gained, all the great institutions which we have built, and all the avenues which stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are the product of the spirit of the people of a nation do when let loose from the field and factory, office and counting room? What meaning will they give to the days which they have thus marked in their history?

We love to boast that our flag stands for freedom. Well, ought it not to stand for freedom from ignorance, disease and vice? That the world is free from each, great power forthwith resumed the pursuit of its own interests. The rivalry between Austria and Prussia was unmistakable even in Vienna and thereafter marked indeluctably toward the year of 1866.

In 1870, when it came to Great Britain's aid to defend France against the extreme measures urged by Prussia, precisely as the British now oppose French severity in the matter of Germany, Russia supported Britain as Italy now supports Great Britain. Nor was Great Britain long in giving clear evidence that she was willing to act in conformity with the terms of the holy alliance as the United States is today determined not to use its troops to enforce league of nations decisions in Armenia or Volhynia. Since the British withdrawal from Europe a century ago foreshadowed American policy today.

One hundred and forty-fourth anniversary of the proclamation of the American Declaration of Independence.

Calvin Coolidge, governor of Massachusetts and republican candidate for vice president, will celebrate his 48th birthday today.

The annual convention of the National Education association will open in Salt Lake City today with a program of patriotic singing in the Tabernacle.

The King and Queen of Spain, accompanied by Prince Jaime, are scheduled to arrive in London today for an informal visit of several weeks.

Sir Auckland Geddes, British ambassador at Washington, is to be a speaker at a patriotic mass meeting in Boston tonight in connection with the International Congressional Council.

Both the United States and Canada will have distinguished delegations in the International Zionist congress which is to meet in London today for its first session since the outbreak of the war.

Today's Birthdays

European Jealousies Spring Up

BY FRANK H. SIMONDS

While America Delays on Peace

Washington, July 3.—It is an unmistakable fact that in the last six months American interest in European affairs in world problems, has languished to an extent unbelievable eighteen months ago. The explanation is found by various commentators in widely different circumstances, in the complexity of the European tangles themselves, in the acute domestic problems within the United States, in the approval of a national election which tends more and more to focus American attention on political questions at home rather than abroad, upon national rather than international questions.

Yet beneath the contemporary lack of interest it is not difficult to discover a subliminal apprehension, an unspoken but not less unmistakable anxiety as to the prospects of events across the water and as to American responsibilities and even more specifically American dangers as the European chaos patently spreads and increases.

Is There Any Remedy?

In my own acquaintance and in the letters readers of my articles address to me the same questions occur again and again: Is there any remedy?

Ever spreading spirit of unrest; is any settlement possible or is Europe drifting steadily toward that sort of crash which must inevitably involve the United States and bring it not a new world war, at least a world anarchy in certain respects more to be feared?

To such interrogations there is, of course, no direct answer. The prophets retired to their caves at least four years ago and most of them disappeared before the world war was six months old and those who lingered have supplied amusement rather than wisdom for an audience which with greater and greater impatience has listened to their misreading of the future.

Yet there is one interesting basis of judgment as to the immediate future and it is found in the merest cursory examination of the events of just a hundred years ago. Then the world was just beginning to awaken to the fact that promises as beguiling as those made before the recent Paris conference were in fact as empty, the new order of mankind the new constitution of international relations made at Vienna was a century ago, just beginning to crumble as that at Versailles is now coming down in ruinous collapse.

If one should take the trouble to examine the history of the promises made before the congress of Vienna, the programme mapped out and the very words used to describe the miracle to be wrought at that great international gathering which undertook to liquidate a conflict which had lasted more than twenty years and ended from Calais to Acre, he would find that the language was little different from that written in the press of a score of nations when the Paris conference was about to open.

He would find, too, that following the congress of Vienna the great powers which had conquered Napoleon undertook to perpetuate world peace by guaranteeing Europe against another French assault, as the conference of Paris sought to protect mankind from a new German assault. The same solemn debates against admitting France to the world conclave, which have been had over Germany today, divided men and nations and called forth the fiercest passions of the world, were repeated five years after Napoleon fell France was admitted.

No Common Purpose.

But the real collapse of the holy alliance was the consequence of the impossibility of preserving any common bond between the nations which had conquered Napoleon. They were united in an alliance which was based on the return of Napoleon from Elba; but after Waterloo, with Napoleon untroubled by the great power forthwith resumed the pursuit of its own interests. The rivalry between Austria and Prussia was unmistakable even in Vienna and thereafter marked indeluctably toward the year of 1866.

In 1870, when it came to Great Britain's aid to defend France against the extreme measures urged by Prussia, precisely as the British now oppose French severity in the matter of Germany, Russia supported Britain as Italy now supports Great Britain. Nor was Great Britain long in giving clear evidence that she was willing to act in conformity with the terms of the holy alliance as the United States is today determined not to use its troops to enforce league of nations decisions in Armenia or Volhynia. ## With Two Weeks of Session Gone Legislature Has Not Yet Touched Big Problems Confronting State

Future of Highway Construction, Disposition of Motor Vehicle Fund, Relief of Crisis in State's Finances, Revision of Revenue Laws and Enactment of "Blue Sky" Law Untouched.

REMAINDER OF SESSION TO KEEP SOLONS BUSY

Committees to Be Kept Busy This Week, After Legislature Convened on Tuesday, and Much Important Legislation Will Be Before Both the House and Senate for Disposition.

By T. B. Conner.

When the general assembly gathers here again on Tuesday morning, almost two weeks of the seven weeks of its allotment will have expired. More than one-fourth of its time gone, and its serious minded members must themselves admit that little has been accomplished to show for it.

If we except the Seminole county bill, which the solons apparently treated as a local measure, although every citizen of Georgia is vitally interested in the creation of new counties, the legislature has only one general bill to its credit, that by Mr. Murdock of Polk, providing that overdue county warrants shall bear interest at the legal rate. The senate, with a considerably better record than the house, has enacted three general bills and a joint resolution, making November 11, Armistice day, a legal holiday.

The great problems confronting the state, however, such as the future of highway construction and the disposition of the motor vehicle fund, the relief of the perennial mid-year crisis in the state's finances, the revision of the revenue laws and the adoption of a tax system that will reach hitherto untaxed property, the enactment of a new "blue sky" law to protect the people from unscrupulous promoters and stock salesmen, needed amendments in the banking act and the school law, codification of act of last year to which attention has been called by Superintendent of Banks T. R. Bennett and School Superintendent M. L. Brittain—all of these problems which are pressing for solution have as yet scarcely been touched by the lawmakers.

These things are brought to the attention of the public, not by way of criticism of the general assembly, which rendered on the whole an excellent account of itself last year, but simply as a statement of fact for any one to draw the conclusion he chooses. It is evident that, in the five weeks remaining, the houses will have plenty of work to occupy all of their time.

The movement to break up the great road construction program worked out by the state highway commission will be brought to an issue in the house this week, if Mr. Knight, of Berrien, and his friends can succeed in getting it up. Their purpose is to require the immediate distribution of all but 15 per cent of the nearly $2,000,000 collected from motor vehicle licenses among the counties according to past road mileage. This, it is confidently forecast by all experts on the subject in Georgia, would effectually put an end for years to come to the proposed state system of paved roads. Many automobile owners and pioneers in the good roads movement frankly declare that rather than see this done, they would favor the repeal outright of the great legislation enacted last year and the abandonment of the good roads program until the people's representatives could take a broader view of the subject.

No Factional Issue.

It is difficult to see how any factional issue can be made of this great question, in view of the fact that the leading spokesmen of all factions have frankly declared themselves in favor of the state-wide system inaugurated last year.

ATLANTA, GA.

Practically every daily newspaper in the state without regard to factional alignment is upholding the program of the highway board. Mr. Watson, in the last issue of his Sentinel, declares unequivocally for the state system when he says: "In my judgment, that fund (the motor vehicle fund) should not be dribbled out to the various counties. It should be held in Atlanta and administered from Atlanta, in order that Georgia may have a uniform system of good roads, such as are the glory of Florida. To send it back to the counties in dribble will mean 145 different ways of using it, and it is humanly impossible for every one of these counties to handle its share wisely, efficiently and honestly in the building of roads that will stand the test as those in Florida stand it."

This is exactly the same as what Senator Ferner Barrett, of Toccoa, meant when he declared at the Ansley dinner of the automobile association Thursday night: "You cannot have 155 different road systems in Georgia."

The issue is in no sense one between the large city counties of the state and the poorer country counties, as some of the county division advocates have tried to make it appear. The large counties have not claimed and will not claim any part of the motor vehicle fund from the state highway commission. The automobile owners of these counties, who pay a large proportion of the tax, want the money used in building roads through counties which are too poor to build them with their own funds, so that they may be able to go from any part of the state to another in their cars. If the money is distributed to the counties, of course, the large city counties would claim and receive their proportionate share. According to the decision of Judge Pendleton, of Fulton superior court, as to the distribution of convicts, the counties would be entitled to count their proportionate share in making their requisition. While Judge Searcy, of the Flint circuit, has rendered an opinion directly contrary to that of the Atlanta judges, the question has not yet been passed upon by a court and no one can tell how it would be decided. In any event, the large counties would get more of the motor vehicle fund under a county distribution of it than they are getting now.

Only Selfish Argument. No argument has been advanced for the county distribution except the selfish one that some of the remote counties would have to wait years before the state roads planned for them would be reached. They figure that the roads with the heaviest traffic coming from large markets would naturally be built first and they had rather claim their share of the state funds than small to be of any permanent advantage to them than to wait for support the bond issue, which would give the state the money to build her county seat connecting system long before it could be raised by taxation from year to year. The friends of the county distribution do not regard it as essential this year, and show no disposition to give up their state-wide program to secure it.

Another matter that will probably arouse a spirited debate in the house this week is the temporary diversion of the motor vehicle fund to the general expense of the state. This will start when the Carswell bill is made a special order. The governor has asked for the money, not because he favors the diversion of the fund from road building, but because he finds its temporary use necessary to meet pressing obligations of the treasury until the tax money can come in next fall. Friends of the highway commission are generally opposed to a diversion of funds as a regular business, but many of them see no harm in the road-building cause, the temporary use of them to meet the existing emergency.

The special order of the house for Wednesday will be the Cole bill, which came up for passage last Wednesday and which the senate assumed a portion of two days in debate. The bill requires that all promissory notes must be stamped as returned for taxes before they can be submitted in evidence in a lawsuit. Sincere objection has been raised to the measure, as business men generally believe it would put an undue burden on the circulation of money, which would have to be borne by the borrower; but many of the friends of tax reform welcome the issue as calculated to call the hands of their opponents, who have urged this measure as the great panacea for getting so-called invisible property on the tax digest.

Common School Levy. Next after the Cole bill, the constitutional amendment of Mr. Johnson of Bartow, which provides for the levy of an extra tax above the present five mill limit to be used for the support of the common schools. Friends of local taxation for school purposes, who finally won their ten-year fight last summer and succeeded in having their amendment, sponsored by Mr. Elders in the senate and Mr. Carswell in the house, submitted to a vote of the people this fall. They see in Mr. Johnson's move a final effort to force them to accept the poll tax. The Bartow representative was their most stubborn opponent throughout their long contest and they fear that the submission of a proposition to increase the tax rate, which it is quite certain the people would not ratify, might involve with it the defeat of their bill to require every county to levy a special tax for school purposes, a thing that a majority of the counties are already doing of their own volition.

The three measures passed by the senate last week are expected to meet with general public favor. The bill Senator Smith of the seventh adopts a uniform warehouse receipt, a measure highly favored by the American Cotton Association and farmers' organizations generally. Senator Dorris of the forty-eighth succeeded by Senator through his bill to protect families against hasty marriages, by requiring the position at the courthouse door of the intention to marry five days before the issue of a license by the ordinary. Another marriage bill passed by the senate makes it a misdemeanor for a husband to desert his wife or a mother to desert her children under 10 years of age. Several new bills have been introduced at this session which will be considered in committee this week and which will be earnestly pressed for passage before the session is over. They include:

The moving picture censorship bill, introduced by Representative Ficklin, of Wilkes, and others and supported by the governor and the state library commission.

"Blue Sky" Bill. The new "blue sky" bill, which has been introduced both in the house and the senate, will probably be given committee hearings some time this week. This measure is sponsored by Senator Dorris, of the Forty-eighth, and Representatives Pace and Milner. It has the support of the bankers and larger business men of the state and is intended to protect the people from "get-rich-quick" schemes which are robbing them of millions of dollars annually. Secretaries of the Molendons have urged legislation on the subject, pointing out that our present law, adopted in 1912, does not afford adequate protection.

A bill by Representative Burt, of Spalding, would create the office of hotel inspector, whose duty it shall be to inspect hotels and restaurants. Every hotel or restaurant would be required to secure a license on the payment of a fee and to have a deputy inspector laid down by the hotel department. The hotel inspector is to be appointed by the governor for a term of six years at a salary of $5,000, and he is to have a deputy inspector at a salary of $2,500. The office is to be supported by fees, and it is to be no burden whatever on the state treasury. Mr. Burt says that his bill is in line with the progressive legislation of other states and is intended solely to secure decent treatment for the traveling public. It is highly favored by the commercial travelers of the state, he says.

A bill by Senator Pruett, of the thirty-second, is intended to carry out the recommendation of School Superintendent M. L. Brittain that county school superintendents be appointed by their boards instead of elected by the people. A companion bill is expected to make the boards elected by the people. The present system is said to have worked very unsatisfactorily both as to superintendents and as to boards.

REEVES ARRESTED AND CORN LIQUOR CHARGE IS MADE

RECEIPT OF 1787 NOW POSSESSION OF ATLANTA MAN

An old receipt, dated in the style of 1787, the date that it bears, is a prized possession of J. C. Sawyer, of Atlanta, who resides in the environment of Piedmont park. The old document was handed down from "Mr. Sawyer's father, who when a boy found it in a batch of old papers that he found in his home. Mr. Sawyer realizes that it has no value, but wishes to hold on to it on account of its antiquity. The receipt is merely a small bit of parchment with the receipt for a specified number of pounds of some kind of produce, presumably in payment for rent. The letters are so blurred that the words cannot be read. The script is distinctly different from the manner of writing nowadays. The parchment is so worn with age that it was necessary some time ago for Mr. Sawyer to paste it together over a piece of cardboard. Mr. Sawyer states that this bit of paper has been in the family for two generations and that he intends to turn it over to his son when he passes away, as a kind of heirloom.

Good Roads

Millions of dollars have been appropriated for the building of good roads in the South. Much of this money will be spent this year. Vast benefit will result over this entire section as these roads are constructed.

Thousands of dollars of this vast sum can be saved—better roads built at less expense—by using

The OLIVER TRACK LAYING TRACTOR

Especially designed for county road building, this 5-ton wonder will do more work, better work and faster work than can be accomplished by any other means.

County and State road officials are urgently requested to investigate the merits of the OLIVER TRACTOR.

GEN. W. L. MARSHALL DIES FRIDAY NIGHT

Former Chief of Engineering Corps of U. S. Army Had Many Connections Here.

Brigadier General William L. Marshall, former chief of the engineering corps of the United States army and well known for his accomplishment of a number of large projects, died Friday night in Washington, D. C. He was a brother-in-law of Mrs. George P. Howard, Mrs. Preston Arkwright, Judge Walter Colquitt, Miss Hattie Colquitt and an uncle of Alfred C. Newell, all of Atlanta.

He is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Lizzie Colquitt, daughter of Alfred H. Colquitt, then time governor and for many years senator from this state. General Marshall was born in Mayville, Ky. His father was a descendant of Chief Justice John Marshall. He joined the Union army and after the war was appointed to West Point, where he graduated with high honors.

His military career has embraced a large number of his achievements. He was first sent out west and after the completion of his duty was assigned to Georgia. Then he was ordered to Chicago in charge of the engineering work. Lake Michigan. The most notable tasks that he performed were in the vicinity of New York. These included revision of the fortification system at Fort Wadsworth, Fort Slocum and other posts, the enlargement of Governor's Island, the deepening of Buttermilk channel, the opposition to the extension of the pier line in the North river.

The completion of the Panama canal came under his supervision at the time of his administration as had of the engineering department of the government. After he had attained the age limit for retirement, he was transferred, by a special act of congress, to the reclamation department, and it was largely due to his efforts that large tracts of land throughout the west and southwest were reclaimed.

Washington, July 3.—Brigadier General William L. Marshall, retired, discoverer of the Rocky mountains and constructor of the latter, died at a private residence here last night after a short illness. Funeral services were held here today and interment was in Arlington National cemetery.

Born at Washington, Ky., in 1846, General Marshall served as a private of cavalry in the civil war and was elected by the people to West Point. He was made chief of army engineers in 1907 and served until his retirement from the army two years later.

He was in charge of construction of levees on the Mississippi and of the improvement of a number of rivers in the west. He was the inventor of automatic movable dams, lock gates and valves.

Reeves arrested in possession of whisky has been sought by federal, county and city officers for several months. According to them, he is the most notorious and boldest whisky dealer that has come under their observation since prohibition went into effect. Detective A. Hornsby and Officer Howell went to this private garage Friday night, located at 106 Trinity avenue, early Saturday morning, when the latter called at a private garage in Vedado way to remove a large quantity of corn whisky and when the latter stored there. Reeves outran the officer, only to be captured later in the day by Detective Paul West, and he was placed under a $1,000 bond on charge of violating the state prohibition laws.

CARLTON TO FIGHT JOHN N. MALONE FOR TAX ASSESSOR

A lively race is promised in city council Monday for city tax assessor. The term of John N. Malone, the incumbent, has expired and he is offering for re-election. He will be opposed by Ben Carlton, secretary of the board of firemasters. Much interest in the contest is being manifested by council members and friends of the two candidates.

Mr. Malone has been connected with the office of tax assessor ever since he was a lad and was elected one of the assessors fourteen years ago. He has been re-elected at the end of each term up to the present time. Mr. Carlton has been associated with the fire department for many years, where he has given efficient service. He is well known and popular among a large circle of friends.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL FILED FOR FRAZIER

A motion for a new trial was filed in behalf of John Frazier, a negro accused as the slayer of Detective Claude Jameson and given a sentence of ten years on a charge of assault with intent to murder, by Attorney E. F. Childress Saturday in the criminal division of the Fulton superior court. The verdict and sentence are claimed void on account of the fact that after the jury had reported, Judge James B. Park, of Greensboro, who presided in the trial, sent the jury back to fix a minimum penalty. The jury later reported a minimum of nine and three-quarter years. The motion set out that Frazier did not consent to the alteration of the verdict. Judge John T. Humphries set the hearing for Tuesday.

For use as surgical compresses caps and masks of aluminum in the criminal division of the court can be circulated have been invented in Europe.

WILL PRESENT FLAG TO ATLANTA SUNDAY

As a testimonial of the faith kept by their surviving comrades, for those who gave their lives in the cause of democracy and in commemoration of the one hundred and forty-fourth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, a flag will be presented to the city this afternoon at 4 o'clock by the Atlanta post, No. 1, of the American Legion, with fitting ceremonies.

The dedication exercises will last only 20 minutes, but the Stars and Stripes will daily be mounted on the flag pole, which stands in the central position of Five Points. The Atlanta recruiting office will unfurl the flag every morning and each night at sunset it will be lowered.

The ceremony will be held at Five Points, the stage centering around the flag pole, beginning at 4 o'clock. The speech of presentation will be made by Robert B. Troutman, prominent young Atlanta attorney, and one of the most active legionnaires in the city. The speech of acceptance will be made by Mayor Key.

The flag will then be raised to the top of the flag pole while the Camp Jessup band plays "The Star Spangled Banner." Captain E. M. Bailey, of the Atlanta recruiting office and member of the Atlanta post, No. 1, will be in charge of the raising of the flag. The ceremony committee includes George M. Wilson, chairman; John L. Westmoreland, J. G. C. Bloodworth, Jr., Robert B. Troutman, W. S. Coburn and Victor Victor.

At the base of the flag pole will be placed a memorial tablet, on which is inscribed the following: "This flag presented to the city of Atlanta and maintained by Atlanta post, No. 1 (formerly Charles D. Montgomery, Jr.), of the American Legion, July 4, 1920, in memory of our gallant comrades, who paid the supreme sacrifice in the world war of 1918-1919."

The flag will then be raised to the top of the flag pole while the Camp Jessup band plays "The Star Spangled Banner." Captain E. M. Bailey, of the Atlanta recruiting office and member of the Atlanta post, No. 1, will be in charge of the raising of the flag. The ceremony committee includes George M. Wilson, chairman; John L. ## COMMISSARY MEN COMING IN AUGUST

Directors of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' association have completed all arrangements for the entertainment of the National Association of Commissary Managers, which will convene in this city on August 10 for a three-day session.

R. M. LINDSAY,
President, National Commissary Managers' association, which meets here in August.

It is estimated that 500 commissary managers from all parts of the country will be here, and the local association is planning to take care of at least 2,000 visiting merchants from all over the south, who are expected to be here at that time.

On Tuesday a watermelon cutting and luncheon will be given at the Druid Hills club. On Wednesday night a dinner-dance and cabaret on the Ansley roof, and on Thursday at noon a genuine old-fashioned

R. L. Lasseter, tailor, formerly located corner Luckie and Forsyth, invites his friends to call and see him in his new location, 19 Pryor, next door to Kimball house.

The Dixie Seal and Stamp company are offering a number of unusual bargains this week in used check writers. Some are practically good as new and are offered at half price.

B. D. Fitzgerald, manager of the National Rubber Products company, manufacturers of Safe-Loc auto patches, is enjoying a good business these days. Safe-Loc patches are making friends fast with both dealers and motorists.

Don't forget the grocers' annual picnic to be held at Lakewood Wednesday, July 21. The public is invited and no admission will be charged. A good time is promised all.

The A. M. Robinson company enjoyed a nice house trade during the past week on orders for immediate delivery.

Dougherty, Little-Redwine company men have been out during the past week and are all doing a nice business. They report crop conditions much improved in all sections and look forward to a good fall business.

J. W. Turner, of the D-L-R company, representing the firm in southwest Georgia, was at headquarters this week, revising his samples and returned to his territory where he is piling up orders.

A. M. Wilkins, of the D-L-R company, who is with the Shriners on their trip to Portland, Ore., writes that he is having the time of his life. He will be back in his territory about July 10 to 15.

Georgia barbecue with all the trimmings will be tendered the guests James J. Ragan, president of the association, appointed Charles J. Williamson, of the A. M. Robinson company, to have charge of the watermelon cutting on Tuesday. Mr. Williamson was one of the men responsible for Atlanta securing the convention, as he visited Cincinnati last year and presented Atlanta's invitation. Meyer Regenstein will have charge of the dinner-dance and cabaret on the Ansley roof Wednesday night, while J. R. Little will be in charge of the barbecue, which will in all probability be staged at Lakewood.

R. M. Lindsay, of Morris Bart, Knoxville, Tenn., is president of the national association, and one of the live wires of the organization. He will preside at the meetings held in Atlanta.

Here's Service for the Jobber By Cliff Moorhead Cigar Co.

Just one year old—having begun business on July 5, 1919, as Cliff Moorhead, distributor, but now operating as the Cliff Moorhead Cigar company—this wholesale cigar distributing house is fast coming to the front as one of the live concerns of its kind in this city. Cliff Moorhead began the first work of the present company as distributor of "Red Dot" cigars to local jobbers and to retail dealers who were not reached by the local jobbers. In November, 1919, the "Royal Princess Cigar" was taken on in connection with "Red Dot" for the city of Atlanta. On March 15 of this year Lloyd Moorehead, who was wearing the state of Georgia for Reguera & Berenguer, Inc., of New Orleans, makers of the "Galdos" cigar, and L. E. Moorehead, southern representative for Barnes-Smith company, of Birmingham, N. Y., makers of the well known "Red Dot" cigar, formed a partnership under the name of the Cliff Moorhead Cigar company, as wholesale cigar jobbers. The company now controls and distributes exclusively in Atlanta and north and middle Georgia, the following well known brands:

"Galdos," mild Havana quality; "Belkoma," Porto Rican, clear Havana combination; "Royal Princess," "Red Dot," "Salome," "Justo Garcia," "Jacksonville Club" and "Blue Lily" and "King Leo."

The company is now working five salesmen—L. J. Moorhead, uptown Atlanta; Cliff Moorhead, city of Atlanta; west of Terminal station; William H. McAffee, city of Atlanta; east of Pryor, Ivy and Peachtree streets; George J. Perry, middle Georgia; and L. D. Dodd, north Georgia.

Plans are under way at this time to open branch houses in Macon and Charlotte, N. C. The company declares it is in position to make immediate deliveries on many of the brands.

Arthur Glass, the popular manager of the second-hand school book department of the Southern Book Concern at 71 Whitehall street, is taking his vacation the coming week in anticipation of the rush that he sees ahead of him in serving the public for the coming school book season.

Mr. Glass has been with the house of "Gavan" for a number of years, and is one of the best posted men in the south on the various kinds and uses of school books. He declares that new school books for the coming season are going to be scarce, due to labor shortage and the paper shortage, and that it behooves every one to buy and use all the good second-hand books they can secure. Mr. Glass, as the manager of this department for the Southern Book Concern, buys all salable books used in the county or the city, and after putting them in the best possible condition, resells them to students in all grades in these schools. He declares there is a big saving in this way, and urges all buyers to secure their books as early in advance of the opening of the schools as possible, as there is bound to be the "usual rush" at the last hour, and even with a large number of second-hand books on sale, some one may be left at the last moment.

Mr. Glass has been with the house of "Gavan" for a number of years, and is one of the best posted men in the south on the various kinds and uses of school books. He declares that new school books for the coming season are going to be scarce, due to labor shortage and the paper shortage, and that it behooves every one to buy and use all the good second-hand books they can secure. Mr. Glass, as the manager of this department for the Southern Book Concern, buys all salable books used in the county or the city, and after putting them in the best possible condition, resells them to students in all grades in these schools. He declares there is a big saving in this way, and urges all buyers to secure their books as early in advance of the opening of the schools as possible, as there is bound to be the "usual rush" at the last hour, and even with a large number of second-hand books on sale, some one may be left at the last moment.

THREE BIG SERVICES AT WESLEY MEMORIAL

No services were held yesterday at the Wesley Memorial church, but three services will be held today. Rev. Charlie Dunaway will preach at 11 o'clock. Then at 3 o'clock he preaches to men only, at which a large crowd is expected. Mr. Dunaway will preach again at night at 8 o'clock.

These are union services, several Methodist churches having joined in this revival campaign. The coming week each church will have a special day and will be assigned seats prepared for the members of that particular congregation.

"UNIVERSITY PARK" LATEST SUB-DIVISION

Buck & Marshall Co. Soon to Develop High-Class Residence Property on the North Side.

A big real estate development that will bring to the attention of home buyers and builders an opportunity to secure some excellent north side property, has been begun by Buck & Marshall Co., experienced real estate men, who have recently opened in Atlanta, but who have been large and successful operators in Jacksonville, Fla., for many years. The tract of land first to be developed by this new concern is to be known as "University Park," and comprises about 100 acres immediately across the Briarcliff road from Druid Hills, adjoining the north line of the home estate of Asa G. Candler, Jr., and extending west to point of intersection with Highland avenue, just south of the home estate of Will V. ... The property is about three blocks in width, and is located in the very best north side residence section, and within easy transportation on both ends.

"University Park" has been planned and platted as a most pleasing residence park, with winding boulevards, public parks, improvements, etc., and the owners are using every reasonable precaution to protect it against losing any of the prestige given it on account of its position on Atlanta's "millionaire road." It is the intention of the owners—in fact, work is already under way—to lay adequate water and sewerage mains, sidewalks, gutters, hard surface streets and otherwise beautify the property in keeping with its location.

University drive will be one of the main arteries of the new property, and this important highway forms one of the important highway links around the entire city. The developers of the property are offering in advance of their big opening sale some of the choice lots and are receiving the co-operation of a number of real estate concerns in handling the proposition. The firm of Buck & Marshall Co. has had much experience in handling subdivisions and are among the leaders in their line in the south. The officials of the company, after looking over many cities and other sections, decided upon establishing an office in Atlanta, where they declare their intention to develop only strictly high-class and meritorious properties.

TRUCK IS SMASHED BY STREET CARS; TWO MEN INJURED

A truck belonging to the Gate City Cotton Mills, driven by El R. C. Candler, was caught between two trolley cars running in opposite directions at McCall's crossing, on Lee street, yesterday morning, shortly after 8 o'clock, and did considerable damage, not only to the rolling stock, but also to a motorist and a passenger.

INQUEST IS HELD; DOCTOR EXONERATED

The inquest over the body of Mary Lindsey, a colored woman, who died on June 13, which was authorized by Judge A. B. Lovett, of Sullivan, Ga., who presided in the criminal division of the superior court that week, was held Saturday and Dr. A. G. Taylor, the colored physician, whose operation on her throat caused a rush of blood, resulting in her death, was exonerated. Claud Lindsey, the husband of the woman, requested that the inquest be held, stating that his wife had been suffering from throat trouble for some time. A physician was called and, according to Lindsey, the throat was lanced, which resulted in the flow of a rush of blood. A hypodermic was then injected, so the petitioner stated, which caused convulsions and a few minutes later his wife died.

Young Boy Injured.

Alvin Myers, 9 years old, who lives on Rosedale road, was struck and seriously hurt by an automobile driven by A. Dunaway, of 274 East avenue early Saturday afternoon. Mr. Dunaway picked the little boy up and carried him to the Grady hospital, later reporting the affair to Call Officer Sterling H. Gresham. Witnesses declared the accident to be unavoidable.

PEACHTREE CREEK BRIDGE OPENED BY FULTON BOARD

Bids for the construction of a concrete bridge over Peachtree creek at Piedmont avenue were opened at the meeting of the public works committee of the Fulton county commission Saturday afternoon. The committee will consider the bids the first part of next week and make its recommendation to the commission at the regular monthly meeting next Wednesday afternoon. The bids ranged from $22,000 to $48,000.

The county will repair Roswell road within the next ten days. It was announced at the meeting Saturday. The repair work will be of a temporary nature only. Announcement was also made that the county had secured all the blacksmiths and engineers necessary to run its engineering plant. Several weeks ago the blacksmiths and engineers walked out when the county refused to raise their wages. Since that time the commissioners have declared an open shop and efforts were made to secure men to fill the places of the strikers. This has been accomplished now and everything is running smoothly, according to the report made by Captain A. Clark, superintendent of public works.

MANY TRUCKS ARRIVE FOR THE CITY MARKET

A great increase in the number of trucks bringing farm products to the municipal curb market was an outstanding feature when the market opened up for business Saturday morning.

The crowd of buyers was very large, and long before 10 o'clock the entire market had sold out and the farmers had returned home. Mrs. Norman Sharp, chairman of the market committee, said that a large increase in market space is anticipated.

All You Could Hope For And In Full Measure

The Cleveland Six gives all, in every-day year-around performance, and gives it in full measure, that you could hope for from the car you buy.

It combines so many good features, power, sturdiness, comfort, style and economy of operation, all worthy of discriminating consideration, that it has come into a place of distinction among light cars.

The exclusive Cleveland motor, of the over-head valve type, quiet and powerful, gives real life to the car. It has flexibility of power and ease of driving that cannot be found in many cars.

"It handles like a feather," says one owner. "It steps out as fast as any car ever built," is another's comment. "It fairly glides over the long mountain climbs," writes a Colorado enthusiast.

The sturdy Cleveland chassis is featured by low-underslung spring construction, positive brakes, and other factors of comfort and safety.

On this one standard chassis are mounted four bodies of unusual beauty and dignity, all handsomely finished and splendidly upholstered.

ANTI-TRUST STAND ASKED OF CANDIDATES

Walker and Holder Answer Letter Asking Position on State Anti-Trust Law.

R. L. Walker, of Macon, who is interested in securing the enactment of a state anti-trust law, which he says is vitally needed to protect the people against interests which have combined to fix the prices of many necessities to the injury of "unorganized merchants, farmers, laborers and the public as a whole," recently addressed a letter to two of the candidates for governor, Clifford Walker and John N. Holder.

He received in reply from Mr. Walker a letter heartily approving his plan. The former attorney general wrote: "I would favor a reasonable and conservative anti-trust law and would assist you in preparing such a bill. I will go further and do all I can to help you have such a law enacted. I think this is a definite answer and states my convictions on the subject. It certainly does approve of such a measure."

Mr. Holder's reply was received some time after Mr. Walker's on account of his absence from home at the time the inquiry was received. Mr. Holder states his position on an anti-trust law as follows: "Your proposition seems to be all right, and I feel that I can favor it. However, before committing myself unreservedly I would like for you to prepare a bill embodying your ideas and send me a copy of this bill. I will give it careful consideration and will then give you a frank and positive statement of my attitude."

Mr. Walker, of Macon, has prepared a circular to be distributed to the public showing the stand taken by the two candidates on the proposed anti-trust legislation.

MISS HARRIS INJURED BY AUTO ON SATURDAY

Miss N. E. Harris, a music teacher of Augusta, who was visiting Mrs. Lillian Faulkner, 309 Peachtree street, was run down at the corner of Peachtree street and North avenue, last evening, by an automobile driven by Charles Kranz, of 62 Walton street, and sustained a compound fracture of the lower right limb and a severe wound in the forehead. She was taken to the Grady hospital, where it was said that her injuries were serious, but not fatal.

Kranz continued his path of destruction by smashing into the automobile of J. Frank Alexander, who maintains an office at 507 Forsyth building, both of the machines being considerably damaged. He was later placed under arrest.

Hurt in Fall From Car.

K. C. Latham, 23 years of age, of 148 Walker street, fell from a street car while returning from a baseball game Saturday afternoon, as the car was rounding a curve on the corner of Jackson street and Angier avenue. As he fell he struck his head on a post on the curb and he is believed to have sustained a fractured skull. He was taken to Grady hospital.

LARGE ENTERTAINMENT STAGED BY THE ELKS

The largest gathering in the history of the Atlanta lodge, No. 78, B. P. O. E., during any of its past entertainments, was staged Friday night at their home on East Ellis street. The home was crowded to its utmost capacity.

The program consisted of a carnival, costume dances and vaudeville singing act, each performer receiving a hearty encore. Mrs. John S. McClelland, the wife of the exalted ruler, was presented with a bouquet of American Beauty roses by the chairman of the entertainment committee, Mr. Newman Lauer.

Dancing was enjoyed until 2 o'clock Saturday morning. The affair was for the members and their immediate families only.

The exalted ruler, John S. McClelland, was the recipient of a four-piece silver set. Mayor Key, after being introduced by the chairman of the entertainment committee, presented the exalted ruler with this token of appreciation. Mr. McClelland responded feelingly.

Walter Hinchcliff, chairman of the house committee, assisted by Ed Allen, looked after the refreshments. Ed Cooledge, Fred Ball and C. A. Daniel were the auctioneers.

Women Wanted For Big Positions

Must Be Strong, Healthy and Energetic
The Kind of Women Nuxated Iron Helps Make

That there are hundreds of executive positions, commanding big salaries, open to the strong-willed, healthy woman of today, is the opinion of Dr. John J. Van Horne, formerly Medical Inspector and Clinical Physician on the Board of Health of the City of New York. Dr. Van Horne says: "To be successful in business as well as in social life, women must keep their blood filled with strength-giving iron. Anemia—lack of iron in the blood—is far more prevalent among women than among men and as a result many a woman fails to grasp the big opportunities in the business world today simply because she does not back up her brains with the physical strength and tireless energy that come from plenty of iron in the blood. Healthy, red-blooded women are the ones whose minds are keenly alive to the good, the big, the great things of life for their bodies are fortified with the strength and vigor that enables them to forge ahead. It is these kind of women that can command and hold positions of power—the kind of women Nuxated Iron helps to make. It is surprising how many people who do not get along in life are in reality suffering from iron deficiency and do not know it. To supply this lack of iron and help build stronger, healthier women, better able physically to meet the problems of everyday life, I believe physicians should, at every opportunity, prescribe organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for in my experience it is one of the best tonic and red blood builders known to medical science."

Calomel

Calomel is a dangerous drug. It is mercury—quicksilver; and attacks your bones. Take a dose of nasty calomel today and you will feel weak, sick and nauseated tomorrow. Don't lose a day's work.

INSTEAD, TAKE
"Dodson's Liver Tone"

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you. Even children like its pleasant taste.

The Last Corn

When you end your corn with Blue-jay, it will be the last corn you let grow. You will know how to stop the pain. And how to quickly and completely end all corns.

There are millions who use Blue-jay now, and they never let a corn remain.

The new-day way

Blue-jay is the new-day way, the scientific method.

It was perfected in a laboratory world-famed for its surgical dressings.

It is supplanting the many treatments which are harsh and inefficient.

It has made paring as ridiculous as it is unsafe, for paring doesn't end corns.

Do this tonight:

Apply to a corn a Blue-jay plaster or liquid Blue-jay—whichever you prefer.

Mark how the pain stops. Then wait a little and the corn will loosen and come out.

What that corn does all corns will do. Some 20 million corns a year are ended in this way.

Don't suffer corns. Don't have your feet disfigured. They can be ended almost as easily as a dirt-spot on your face. They are just as incurable.

Don't forget this. It means too much to you.

Ask your druggist for Blue-jay.

INSTEAD, TAKE
"Dodson's Liver Tone"

There's no reason why a person should take sickening, salivating calomel when a few cents buys a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone—a perfect substitute for calomel.

It is a pleasant, vegetable liquid which will start your liver just as surely as calomel, but it doesn't make you sick and can not salivate. Take a spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone instead and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist says if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone acts better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you. Even children like its pleasant taste.

The Last Corn

When you end your corn with Blue-jay, it will be the last corn you let grow. You will know how to stop the pain. And how to quickly and completely end all corns.

There are millions who use Blue-jay now, and they never let a corn remain.

The new-day way

Blue-jay is the new-day way, the scientific method.

It was perfected in a laboratory world-famed for its surgical dressings.

It is supplanting the many treatments which are harsh and inefficient.

It has made paring as ridiculous as it is unsafe, for paring doesn't end corns.

Do this tonight:

Apply to a corn a Blue-jay plaster or liquid Blue-jay—whichever you prefer.

Mark how the pain stops. Then wait a little and the corn will loosen and come out.

What that corn does all corns will do. Some 20 million corns a year are ended in this way.

Don't suffer corns. Don't have your feet disfigured. They can be ended almost as easily as a dirt-spot on your face. They are just as incurable.

Don't forget this. It means too much to you.

McADOO FAILED TO SHOW STRENGTH BACKERS CLAIMED

Ex-Secretary Had Become Struggling Contender by Fifth Ballot, Mark Sullivan Declares.

CONSCRIPTION IDEA WAS WITHOUT BASIS

Demand Was Spontaneous, But Not Strong Enough to Swing Convention as Followers Had Predicted It Would.

Chicago, Ill., July 3.—(Special.)—By the time the fifth ballot had been taken early in the forenoon it was clear that McAdoo did not have as spontaneous strength as his backers had claimed and supposed. The whole theory of the McAdoo candidacy was that there was an overwhelming call for him. He had withdrawn from the race; he had said that the withdrawal was his final answer, and he had meant this to be irrevocable. Thereupon, certain friends and associates of his, together with friends and members of the administration, had represented to him that there was so urgent a call for him among the public at large and also among the delegates arriving in San Francisco that he ought not to forbid them to make a fight for him.

Nature of Demand. In truth, there was a good deal of demand for him. All the demand for anybody that was spontaneous was for him, but there was not as much among the delegates as his backers here had supposed, and the whole theory of McAdoo's candidacy was based on the strength of this spontaneous demand.

Just as soon as it became apparent that he was short of a majority of the delegates, the entire basis of his candidacy changed. By the fifth ballot he had become a struggling contender hanging on by the skin of the teeth to a scant third of the delegates.

Embarrassing Position. After that, even if he should be successful, he would not be in a very exalted position before the country. A man can hardly be in the role of a reluctant conscript and at the same time be fighting desperately to hold his own.

Mr. McAdoo's position of reluctance obeying the call of duty disappeared between 2:30 a. m. and noon. By noon it was like any old-fashioned race conducted along lines of the same strategy.

GREEK ARMY DIVISION LANDED AT PANDERMA

THREE CONFESS TO RAIL ROBBERY

Part of $60,000 of Pilfered Marine Funds Recovered by Augusta Officials Late Saturday.

Augusta, Ga., July 3.—(Special.)—Ernest Hart, a jitney driver; W. J. Quattlebaum, a farmer living at Butler's Creek, six miles out, and Milledge Derrick, the express messenger in the case, are under arrest in connection with the robbery of the Charleston and Western Carolina railway express car of nearly $60,000 Wednesday morning on the outskirts of Augusta. The men have confessed that they were in collusion.

When the safe was broken open Wednesday afternoon at Quattlebaum's place, or in the woods near the place, division was made of the money, it is said. Quattlebaum says that about $15,000 was given him by Hart as his share, and Hart took the rest for Derrick's and his own share.

This afternoon Quattlebaum told the sheriff to take him to his home and he would turn over the money he had. This he did, a large quantity of silver being dug from the point where it was buried in woods near Quattlebaum's house where the safe had been broken into. It was Quattlebaum who had picked up the safe when it was thrown from the train at Lover's Lane. Later in the day when Hart was told that Quattlebaum had surrendered the money he had, he informed the sheriff that if he would drive him to a point he designated in the country, where he said he had secreted his share of the money, he would deliver it to the officers. He was carried to the point he indicated, but he declared that he had either lost his bearings or that some one had stolen the money where he had hidden it. He said, however, that he had only secured less than one-third of the money, that he had been given a sack said by Quattlebaum to contain about $12,000, but that his count showed there was only $14,000 in it.

He insists that Quattlebaum was given Derrick's share, and Quattlebaum insists that Hart was given Derrick's share. At any rate up to this time the officers have not been able to locate the remainder of the money. The presence of the guard, W. N. Roberts, was a surprise for the robbers. When they framed up the theft they did not anticipate that there would be a guard on the train. However, they determined to go on with the work and first plans were for Derrick to throw off the safe and afterwards to handcuff and chloroform himself, and the most careful preparations to that end had been made. But when it became known to the plotters that Roberts was to be on guard duty on the train, Hart volunteered to enter the car and to overpower Roberts.

E. L. FLANIGAN IS HELD IN LIBERTY BOND CASE

Dallas, Texas, July 2.—E. L. Flanagan is under arrest here in connection with a case originating in Caddo parish, Louisiana, said by federal agents to involve $50,000 in Liberty bonds. Local government agents declare Flanagan was pursued through a dozen states before his arrest here yesterday. He waived preliminary examination when arraigned before a United States commissioner.

McADOO DOES NOT WANT NOMINATION

came away from his office thoroughly convinced that if he was nominated without being an active candidate his sense of patriotism would force him to accept. Great numbers of letters and telegrams were piled high upon his desk—missives urging him to assume the leadership for his party. One of these was from a woman, a working woman, who enclosed $10, and who characterized him as the best friend working people have in public life. Another laboring man from Illinois sent $100 and urged him as the friend of labor to stand for the presidency.

Mr. Upshaw quoted the former secretary of the treasury as saying: "I am humbled beyond measure with these appeals. I feel like going away off somewhere and praying God for divine guidance." "I left his presence," said Mr. Upshaw, "impressed with his powerful personality, and feeling that I had been in the presence of a truly great man."

Given Welcome Dinner.

Congressman Upshaw, who arrived in Atlanta Saturday morning for his summer vacation in Georgia, was tendered a welcome dinner at the Kimball house last night by a number of his local friends. He was the guest of honor and the following men were present: J. C. Harrison, H. D. Sorrels, Walter McElreath, I. M. Sheffield, H. A. Allen, Hapeville; J. C. Reid, Fairburn; W. W. Benson, Rev. C. A. Ridley, M. D. Collins, Fairburn; D. H. Brackett, T. S. Skipper, of the carpenters' union; M. H. Abbott, and John Ball, of the carpenters' union.

Mr. Upshaw will preach a patriotic sermon tonight at the Central Baptist church. The subject will be "The Americanism That Will Save America."

and attempt to hold all the votes they could. They said no attempt would be made to coalesce with the Palmer people because they felt a breaking of the Palmer block would turn votes to Cox. The Cox people at the same time had a conference and announced they also would be willing to go to somebody else if the transition resulted in losses to each other.

BOOZE CAR WRECKED AND LIQUOR SEIZED

Detectives Howell and Hornsby located and chased a car containing a quantity of liquor last night for about a mile and a half, ending with the wrecking of the liquor car at Bellwood avenue and Linden street, where it collided with another car. Two white men, occupants of the liquor car, jumped out and made their escape. Fifteen gallons of whiskey was seized by the officers and taken to the police station.

NOW OPEN The ROYAL CAFE

Get away from the stuffy and warm eating places where hot dishes form the major part of the menu. Come here and enjoy an atmosphere that is cool and refreshing, and where the bill of fare offers variety enough to satisfy the most particular patron. Just courteous and prompt service, wholesome food and pleasing prices.

THE ROYAL CAFE is now in readiness to serve you. Money has not been spared in making this one of the finest restaurants in the South. The hundreds of little details that make a restaurant more attractive and home-like have received our consideration in the building of the ROYAL.

Our cuisine simply cannot be duplicated anywhere in the South. The very best help obtainable is on our staff of cooks and waiters. Men who have been serving the public in their several capacities for years will be at your service.

THERE is only one thing left for you to do, to properly appreciate the ROYAL CAFE. Come. Judge for yourself. The more particular you are the more certain you are to be pleased with all the little details about the ROYAL.

After all, the environments about the place you eat—its general appearance and attractiveness—have a lot to do with the pleasure and enjoyment you get out of your meal. These, too, have received even more than due consideration. You will be surprisingly impressed the minute you step inside the door.

You, too, will agree that the ROYAL CAFE is a ROYAL PLACE TO EAT.

NET STARS READY FOR TOURNEY

Play in the city championship tourney will officially get under way Monday morning at Piedmont park, when the first round in men's singles is begun. Twenty-three players are entered, and as they represent the cream of net artists in Atlanta, some great tennis is bound to develop before the week is out.

The doubles drawings have not yet been held, but will be Monday afternoon, and the first round played Tuesday. Any additional teams wishing to enter, may do so by handing in their names to the referee at the courts Monday.

Carrollton Gets Injunction Over Outlaw League

ampering with any players now under contract with the Carrollton club of the Georgia State league, says J. R. Terrell, of the lowest circuit court, in the temporary injunction and the final hearing will be held during the earlier part of the coming week. A further injunction against the players "Hap" Madison and "Pre" Madison of the Madison club, prevents their indulging in any game played by the Madison ball club. The action of the Carrollton club came as a result of the jumpers of the two state leagues of the Georgia State club to the independent team. Further ampering with the players under the contracts of the Carrollton club caused the filing of the injunction.

The Rugged Endurance of a is traced to its Special Steels

A dollar travels a long distance in a Maxwell. For its steels last. They stand terrific road shocks. They seldom fracture. They outlive the ordinary steels.

They are made to Maxwell's own formulae, developed from thousands of laboratory tests and countless miles on the road.

They make possible the ideal construction of great strength with light weight.

The tendency today is toward light weight, the elimination of useless pounds.

It makes for better motoring. It saves money in car operation. It makes possible greater acceleration, quicker brake action, less repairs, a higher average road speed, and lower initial cost.

Maxwell, with its special steels to give not only light weight but rugged endurance, has won an ever increasing number of friends. To date nearly 400,000. In another year 100,000 more.

FEDERAL RESERVES TO INVADE MACON SECTION

The strong outfit that represents the Federal Reserve Bank club on the diamond in and around Atlanta will take a little longer trip on Monday. This time it is to invade the town of Macon, when they play the Luther Williams Banking company. This team is said to be the best Macon has to offer, and from reports they are going to give the Atlanta "gang" a real battle. But wait, you'll have more of that Atlanta "gang"!

A large party made up of members of the various bank clubs will make the trip with the team. Special arrangements have been made with the Central of Georgia to take them in a body. The train leaves the Terminal at 7:50 o'clock Monday morning.

Lawn Sprinkler

Because you wish to distribute the water with a finer spray. The single large nozzle would direct all the water to one spot, and would be very wasteful.

WHY NOT APPLY THIS LOGIC TO THE CARBURETER

If it has a single large jet then the gasoline meets the air in a bunch, failing to distribute it and causing a great waste and improper mixture. But if it is a

it works on the sprinkler principle. The fuel distributor with its large number of small nozzles, each spraying its charge into the air, forms a perfectly uniform mixture with no waste. Why spend time and money on single-jet carbureters when you know the MASTER to be right in principle. See us today.

Rain Breaks Up Events At Gun Club

What looked like one of the most successful shoots of the entire season came to a sudden halt Saturday, when old man weather let loose one of the worst showers and wind storms that has visited that part of the city in many a day.

More than thirty shooters, lined up in six squads, had started on the regular 50 event, but old man weather took part in the game and the third squad was forced to shoot the second 15 during a downpour of rain and against the wind.

In spite of the weather, however, many of the sportsmen finished the event. H. J. Field carried off the honors of the day by taking 48 out of the 50 birds. Mr. Field's shooting was sensational and furnished the big thrill of the day by shooting part of his group during the worst part of the storm.

J. R. Patillo and W. C. Carpenter took second place by breaking 47 of the clay target, while M. C. Willis came in third by taking 46. The club will hold another shoot Monday afternoon.

Lanett Club Wins Pennant in West Georgia Circuit

Shawmut, Ala., July 3.—Lanett and Langdale tied up this morning on the Shawmut grounds to decide the winner of the pennant of the first half of the 1920 season. Lanett coming out on the long end of a 5 to 3 score, thereby giving them the rag. The game was witnessed by the largest crowd ever attending a ball game in the history of the league. The crowd was estimated at over two thousand. Both pitchers were in good form, each walking two men and striking out four, and while Lovelace was touched for seven hits, Holliday yielded five.

For Lanett, the fielding of Shaw in centerfield was a feature, and the hitting of Barnes was outstanding. He connected three times out of four trips up, one going for a triple. Bell's hitting was a feature for Langdale. His big stick drove out a homer and a triple out of five trips to the plate. Hackeymer executed some pretty plays around first.

Langdale scored one in the first when Bell sent one over the right field wall. They scored again in the fourth when Griffin walked and scored when the right fielder misplayed Bell's line drive, which went for three bases. Lanett scored four in the second after two had gone out on two singles, three errors, a base on balls and a passed ball. Wheeler was hit by a pitched ball, when Ollinger singled to center. Wheeler was hit by a pitched ball, when Decker threw to second to catch Shaw. Ollinger came home, when Griffin made a bad throw to the plate.

In some parts of Austria, and especially in the hilly country toward Hungary, there exists the extraordinary custom of eating arsenic, one of the most deadly poisons. There, however, the peasants are so accustomed to its use that they are able to take huge quantities without any harm, and they assert that the remarkable beauty of their women is entirely due to constant drugging with arsenic.

Semi-Finals Are Reached in Keenan-Chambers Trophy

The semi-finals were reached in the Keenan-Chambers tournament at the Brookhaven club yesterday, with T. W. Boucher playing Charles Elyea and Clarence Knowles playing H. R. Talla.

W. W. Craxton turned in the best first score for the day, with a total of 110 with a 30 handicap, making a net score of 80.

John Aldridge ran second, with a score of 105 minus his handicap of 22 for an 83 for the course. Some great golf was played in several of the flights and the matches next week will bring out some still closer competition. The pairing for the semi-final rounds are as follows:

First Flight.
T. W. Boucher plays Charles Elyea.
Clarence Knowles plays H. R. Talla.
Second Flight.
C. B. Bigwell plays T. E. Johnson.
H. P. Hermance plays Frank Spratlin.
Third Flight.
H. B. Kennedy plays H. Brunnelkamp.
Charles Rossa plays John Aldridge.
Fourth Flight.
Jack Milstead plays Clarence Bleser.
F. O. Stone plays L. D. Burns.

of runs scored. Each has registered 43 times.
Rice, of Washington, pilfered five bases in the past week, and is far out in front among the base-stealers with thirty-five thefts. His nearest rival is Roth, a team mate, who has stolen nineteen bases.
Other leading batters: Weaver, Chicago, 356; Milan, Washington, 355; Johnston, Cleveland, 353; Rice, Washington, 350; Felsch, Chicago, 339; Judge, Washington, 333.
Tincup, Louisville's Indian pitcher, continues to lead the American association hitters with an average of .418.
Hargrove, of St. Paul, with eight circuit smashes, leads in home runs; Rapp and Dressen, the St. Paul teammates, are running a close race for base-stealing honors, the former having stolen 26 sacks to the latter's 25.

TILDEN IS NEW BRITISH TITLEHOLDER

Chicago, July 3.—Rogers Hornsby, by the St. Louis star, banged out his one hundredth hit of the season in Wednesday's game against Cincinnati, the first player in the National league to touch the century mark. He whipped slightly in his batting, with an average of .350, but continues to hold a comfortable lead among the regulars who have participated in thirty-five or more games, according to averages released today which include only games of Wednesday. Hornsby's total base mark of 157 is the highest in the league. In addition to this record, the St. Louis favorite is sharing run scoring honors with Plack, of Chicago. Each has registered 46.
Cy Williams, the Philadelphia outfielder, slammed out another homer which gave him eight.
Max Carey, of Pittsburgh, is leading the base-stealers with 25 thefts.
Other leading batters: E. Smith, New York, 364; Nicholson, Pittsburgh, 355; Robertson, Chicago, 352; Daubert, Cincinnati, 325; Williams, Philadelphia, 325.
The batting of "Babe" Ruth continues to be the chief topic in the American league. He bagged a brace of homers in the double-header with Philadelphia last Wednesday which gave him a total of 24, only five behind the world's record which he made last year. In addition to cracking out homers, Ruth is steadily climbing to the top among the batters of the league who have taken part in thirty-five or more games. He is hitting .374, just twenty points behind Tris Speaker, of Cleveland, and Joe Jackson, of Chicago, who are sharing the honor of runners-up to George Sisler, the St. Louis star, who is batting .412. Speaker and Jackson are hitting .394.
Ruth has tied Speaker in number

Wimbledon, July 3.—William T. Tilden, of Philadelphia, is now the holder of the British lawn tennis championship, having defeated today Gerald L. Patterson, of Australia, in the challenge round. Tilden's victory was the climax of the long series of games against the world's greatest experts, through which he had come during the past week. Throughout his play has been consistent and brilliant, and today he took the measure of the Australian by a combination of brilliant plays and clever strategy. He found his opponent's weakest points, and, after the first set which Patterson won, directed his play against the Australian's weaknesses, capturing the next three sets and the match.
A fine exhibition of tennis was given in the doubles by Charles S.

Garland, of Pittsburgh, and R. Norris Williams, of Boston, against A. R. Kinsmore and J. C. Parke, the British pair. Here also the Americans lost the first set, and thereafter took three straight sets and the match.
Gerald L. Patterson, of Australia, and Miss. Susanne Lengien, of France, defeated Randolph Lycett, of Australia, and Miss Elizabeth Ryan, of California, in the finals of the mixed doubles in the British lawn tennis championship tournament here today. The winners took the match in straight sets, 7-5, 6-3.

Performance This Week Proves Essex Stamina and Endurance

Record Run to Tallahassee, Fla.

Taylor H. Mitchell, Jr., piloting a Standard Stock Essex carrying five passengers, left Atlanta Sunday at 2 a. m. and reached Tallahassee, Florida, at 10:14 a. m.

Total distance covered, 320 miles. The condition of the roads was unfavorable, but despite this fact, the total elapsed time between Atlanta and Tallahassee was only 48 hours and 14 minutes.

This sets a road record from Atlanta to Tallahassee of several hours better than any other record run.

The average speed for the entire trip, counting all lost time and stops, was approximately 39 miles per hour.

Sealed Gear Run to Macon, Ga.

Another Standard Stock Touring Essex taken from our showrooms made the entire trip to Macon, Georgia, and return in high gear, the gears being placed in high and sealed (gear-shift lever being removed to preclude the possibility of a gear-shift over the entire trip).

As on the speed-breaking trip to Tallahassee the general average road surface was bad, and in many instances extremely difficult; nevertheless, the sturdy Essex encountered nothing that could not be easily made in high gear, without sacrificing the comfort of the driver or the passengers.

The Essex Motor accomplished this feat without excessive heat or any other annoying results to the motor or the car.

Record Climb Stone Mountain

Later in the week the Essex—a standard stock car as in the other instances—was driven to the top of Stone Mountain (the world's largest solid rock mountain) in record-breaking time, even though there is nothing but a footway on any part of it.

The quiet and flexible but powerful Essex motor found no difficulties in accomplishing this feat, for the climbing ability of the Essex is no less renowned than its speed endurance.

In descending, Essex break equipment never once failed to hold the car, even on the steepest descents.

Performance in Other Centers

Feats of greater magnitude, equally taxing to any motor car, have been performed in all great automobile centers in the United States. These feats took the nature of speed tests, hill climbing tests, economy tests, sealed high-gear runs and, in fact, every conceivable test that could be imposed upon any automobile.

What Do These Tests Prove?

Possibly your Essex will never be called upon to perform any of these unusual feats, but the Essex owner gets a great deal of satisfaction from knowing that his car is ready and can be depended upon to come through any emergency if the occasion should arise.

And, the knowledge that his car will successfully perform the divers feats accomplished by it over the entire United States during ESSEX WEEK possibly gives the Essex owner greater satisfaction, because of the fact that it offers irrefutable evidence that his car is built of the very best materials and is far above the average from an engineering point of view, as well as the knowledge that if his Essex has and will perform such feats, that under the normal service he will impose upon it, its service will be long and unailing.

Possibly such confidence in the Essex is responsible for the fact that a larger number of them were sold during their first year than of any other first-year car in the history of the automobile.

Sciple Is Winner In Benefit Match At East Lake

Charles M. Sciple won the first place in the big benefit golf tournament staged at East Lake club yesterday for the Home of Incurables. Playing under the handicap of 14, and adding the 75 for par on the course, Mr. Sciple was able to plant his flag on the green of the nineteenth hole before playing his total of 87 strokes. The trophy in the winning round was a handsome golf bag awarded by Parks-Chambers company. C. W. Carver ranked second, and was awarded the leather wallet donated by J. P. Allen & Co. D. H. Dickinson won the title to the most bottles given in the third place by the Hightower Hardware company. Y. L. Oge's booby prize of the manhole was claimed by George H. Boynton. There were approximately twenty-five entries in the tourney. The second of the tournaments for the benefit of the Home of Incurables will be held at Brookhaven Monday, July 5. Entries may be made in this tournament any time during the day Monday for the regular entrance fee of $1.50, which will go in full to the improvement of the Home of Incurables. The interest shown in the opening tourney is expected to increase the number of entries in the Brookhaven and Druid Hills tourneys scheduled for July 5, and July 10, respectively.

ARMY ATHLETES OF SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT WIN

St. Louis, July 3.—Running up 29 points, the southern department held its lead in the army athletic championships today, with a total of 59. Eight final events were held today and the winners will compete in the Olympic games try-out. Lieutenant Colonel M. Scott, eastern department, won the 800-yard run in one minute, 55 seconds, and Lieutenant Derrill Trenchum, central department, carried off the honors in the 440-yard hurdles, negotiating the distance in 53.2 seconds. Sergeant Elmer Carolina, southern department, won the 56-pound weight throw. His distance was 32 feet 7 inches. The 3,000 meter team race was captured by the southern department with 17 points. Sergeant M. L. Herring, southern department, won the running hop, skip and jump final, going 43 feet 3 inches. Lieutenant L. C. Hahn, eastern department, was victor in the ancient pentathlon with 8 points. The central department's team won the 440-yard relay. Five contestants are tied in the high jump final, ascending five feet ten inches. They are Field Clerk Arthur Marden and Lieutenant Gene Vidal, eastern department; Musician Dorsey Battles and Private Andrew Moreland, southern department, and Captain C. S. Maulsby, army of occupation, Moreland then won first prize in the jump off.

Standing of the other departments are: Eastern, 29 points; central, 27; army of occupation, 22; western, 10; northeastern, 9; and Hawaiian, 4.

drop the matter entirely. Magee's friends contend it would be useless for him to press the claim when he

LeRoy Gregory Resigns From Atlanta Trust Company to Manage Oliver Rim Co.

C. E. Gregory Promoted to Secretary and Treasurer of This Promising New Manufacturing Concern,
Which Has Just Begun Operations

LeRoy Gregory, prominent in banking circles in Atlanta and the south for a number of years, has resigned as Treasurer of the Atlanta Trust Company to become Vice President and General Manager of the Oliver Rim Company, according to an announcement made Saturday night. He will assume his new duties Monday morning.

It was also announced that Cleburne E. Gregory, formerly a well-known newspaper man in this city, has been made Secretary and Treasurer of the Oliver Rim Company. He went with the Oliver Rim Company as Advertising Manager and was promoted to Assistant Secretary and Treasurer some time ago. The two Gregorlys are not related except in the fact that they are both native Kentuckians.

The Oliver Rim Company has started operations under most promising circumstances, with a signed contract for all the Oliver rims that can be manufactured in five years. The quick change features of this rim have made a great hit all over the country. Directors of the Oliver Rim Company are Elmer Oliver, president; LeRoy Gregory, vice president; Joseph G. Blount, distributor; Maxwell Chalmers and Westcott cars; C. C. Whitaker, of the Truscon Steel Company; Neal Meier, of the Cleveland Oconee Lumber Company; F. A. Seeger, of the Seeger Machine Tool Company; V. G. Collins; A. J. Aycock, cashier of the Bank of Pinewood; S. C. and E. H. Smith, cashier of the Bank of Johnston, South Carolina.

The Chummy Tourster

AN example of Apperson ability to produce results. Typically a ladies' car from the standpoint of beauty of line and ease of driving, this Apperson Anniversary Eight has power and speed and sturdiness that appeal to red-blooded men. Do more than look at "show cars"; test them out; ride behind the mighty Apperson motor, simplified with eighty less parts; see its unequalled performance, then decide what car to buy.

INDIANA TRUCKS

How Much Should You Pay For a Truck
$3000—$4000—$5000

That's really not the question.—The price means nothing until you consider the life of the truck—the miles the truck will run. It is the cost per mile of delivery service that counts. Many INDIANA Trucks with 100,000 mile records are still running—doing the same hard work. The real cost of these trucks is greatly reduced per ton per mile.

You should ask—"How much this truck will cost me every mile it runs?" It's a question that INDIANA Trucks have answered decisively, for their cost is very low per mile.

Tell us the size truck you need—let us prove that an INDIANA will save you money.

INTRODUCING-

—to the motoring public of Atlanta and the Southeastern territory the Lair-Booth Motor Corporation and the products which they are handling—the Crow-Elkhart, the Fiat, and the R. & V. Knight. Our show and salesrooms at 437 Peachtree Street are being made into fitting surroundings for these sterling products of the best automobile brains in the world. Your inspection of these cars, your visit to our new place, all will be appreciated, and you will be more than amply rewarded for your trip.

The Crow-Elkhart Motor Car, in its twelfth year of production, offers every principle of strength, economy and endurance that it is possible to build into a motor car at any price. Unit power plant with a special Spillman motor, three-point suspension, Hotchkiss drive, semi-elliptic springs, full floating rear axle and frictionless universal joint construction lay the foundation upon which is built the remarkable performance of the tried and true automobile. Statistics show that the units entering into the composition of the Crow-Elkhart are those which are found only in cars far exceeding the Crow-Elkhart in price, and their service record is far and above what we claim for them.

In the R. & V. Knight is presented America's exclusive Knight Six. It is the embodiment of all the unquestioned qualities which have made the Knight motor a word of satisfaction ever since its first presentation. Distinguished by many new features, the R. & V. Knight is in every particular a motor car of distinction, an automobile which measures up to the high standard set by the superiority of its power plant.

The Fiat, the wonderful Italian masterpiece of motor car construction, will be on display shortly in our showrooms.

These lines represent a vital section of the cars offered for sale in America. To dealers in sections where they are not represented they hold promise of a valuable franchise. The Lair-Booth Motor Corporation takes its place in the business world of Atlanta with the confidence of careful organization and meritorious automobiles.

REAL ESTATE—For Sale REAL ESTATE—For Sale

North Side Colonial Home
5 Bedrooms, 3 Baths. Lot
25x250

THE SIGHT OF THIS PROPERTY will bring painful recollections of past failures to buy bargains offered you, and cause cold chills to chase each other up and down your spine for fear that you may lose this one. I'm sober, and mean every word of it. The picturesque entrance with winding stairs approaching the second floor; the spacious parlor and dining room, the large bedroom and bath on first floor make a most complete and enjoyable arrangement. Upstairs there are four bedrooms, two full baths and everything to make life happy and pleasant. It's the former home of my old friend, Dr. Henry L. Wilson, No. 46 Peachtree place, between the Peachtrees. I have exclusive sale, and am authorized to sell it for $23,000; and terms can be made. It will sell immediately at the price.

North Side Bungalow—Four Bedrooms. Fine Lot 54x175

THIS IS DECIDEDLY ONE OF THE MOST ATTRACTIVE bungalows in the entire Druid Hills section. There's the touch of refinement and culture in the superb ensemble for the interior. The house was planned and built for a private home. The material was the best and workmanship of a superior character. Now you customers who are hunting for just such a home can be cared for right here. The house is in fine condition. There's no loan on it. Price $22,500 (cost of the house without the lot). Terms $3,000 cash and $75 per month. It ought to sell Monday, if you can appreciate the quality of such a home. There's a garage and servant's room.

Juniper St. Home—Four Bedrooms
2 Baths. A Modern Home

SURELY YOU CANNOT AFFORD TO WAIT until August to buy a home. There is such a spirited demand that they are disappearing from the market every day. September 1 is coming fast, and you may be out in the street. This home has every modern equipment, including garage and servant's room, and can be delivered before "moving time." It was built for a home, and you must not overlook this fact in considering it. Price $22,500—and it's worth the money. The owner will make terms.

Peachtree Road Home—Five Bedrooms, 2 Baths. Lot 100x1,200

IF YOU WANT A HANDSOME HOME ON PEACHTREE, with a farm for your back yard, just take a look at this. Standing on the front, you view the rising sun (that means east front, you know), and a picturesque landscape cannot escape your vision. It's there to stay. This beautiful home was erected by the owner, and you may well understand that he spared no expense in material and workmanship. It's modern in everything. Concrete drive, garage, servant's room. Price $20,000, and you may have terms.

That Juniper St. 8-Room House on Lot 100x290 at $13,500

TO SAVE MY LIFE, I cannot understand why any sensible, practical, business man or good lawyer would pass up this great bargain. You see, the house is built on half the lot. It's there to stay. You know how many things can be done with this property. You just go look at it. "No. 243," and see me at once. I can show you $1,000 or $5,000 profit in it.

A North Side Brick Bungalow for
$9,500

SIX-ROOMS, two bedrooms and included sleeping porch; hardwood floors, stone and brick foundation; side drive; servant's room. Near a bus, and in perfect condition. $9,500 cash and $45 month takes it, and you must know it would rent for $80 month. I can do it for you.

Another Bungalow—This One Is
$8,500. Three Bedrooms

YOU CAN BUY IT for $2,500 cash and $75 month. No use to describe it any further. If you need a home, don't wait and have to stand in line like the others who are waiting to rent houses, but come on and see us at once, and we will take care of you. It's our business.

North Side Cottage for a Citizen of Moderate Means

IF YOU ARE THE MAN who must have something away under $10,000, then you are my customer for this home. There are six rooms, and the elevated lot is 75 feet wide. No. 47 East Twelfth street, between Juniper and Piedmont, is where you find it. Price $8,500. Terms $1,500 cash and $50 month. Proximity to Piedmont park adds to its value, and the terms are good.

569 PONCE DE LEON AVENUE—Well-built, two-story, frame residence of eight rooms and included sleeping porch; hardwood floors in large living room, sun parlor and dining room. This home is in perfect condition; has large tile bathroom, plenty of closets. Servant's room in basement; Radi heater, Moneier furnace. Built for a home less than six years ago. Cement drive to double garage. Price of this beautiful home on easy terms of $18,000.

277 EAST FIFTH STREET—Large, six-room bungalow, well arranged for two families; has large hall, butler's pantry, plenty of closets; fine electric light fixtures. Wide porch running the width of house. Built on a terraced lot 50 feet wide. We can make a low price with a $2,000 cash payment.

308 EAST FIFTH STREET—Modern brick residence of five large rooms; built less than a year ago. Has hot-water heat; large tile bathroom and hardwood floors. This home is in perfect condition. Price $12,000 under the market. Only $8,500, on terms of $2,000 cash, then $50 monthly.

296 GORDON STREET (West End)—Southwest corner of Queen and Gordon streets, known as the Iron residence. Lot 70x150 feet; has seven large rooms and kitchenette. At small expense can be arranged for two families; four rooms can also be added on the second floor. This home is in first-class condition, having been gone over by the owner for his home. On account of richness, he offers same $2,000 below the present market value. The interior should be inspected carefully on account of the wonderful woodwork, mantle etc. Price only $8,100, on terms—less for all cash. We believe the vacant lot in this location to be worth at least $5,000.

Outlook For Business Brighter, Says Platt

Expected Easing of the Money Market, Higher Prices for Silver and Steadiness in Cotton Feature Market Expert's Review.

By C. H. Platt.

New York, July 2.—(Special.)—After stagnation marked much of the past week in the securities markets, with the volume of trading in the market on a smaller scale than it has been in the past year and a half in any session. The market in the democratic convention but there was also a desire to avoid doing anything to increase the money stringency, for there was an enormous demand for funds for the mid-year dividend and interest payments, while there was a switch in the market from a new government temporary loan, as a result of this cautious attitude toward money, rates did not set at abnormal figures, as had been expected would have been the case in view of the shortage of loanable money prior to the short-lived but extremely important stress laid on the money market at the turn of the year.

A canvass of opinion in security houses leads to the conclusion that more and more important interests are expecting a turn for the better in the market in the next few weeks, some expecting that prices will go much higher within the course of the next few days as soon as the July disbursements have been made.

CORN LIST DROPS ON LIQUIDATION

Rallies After Low Opening, Then Declines Sharply to a Lower Level.

Chicago, July 3.—Radically bearish sentiment regarding corn and oats manifested itself today on the exchange. Discouraged holders pressed the selling and there was a sharp break in values, corn closing nervous, 3/4 to 1/2 net lower; oats lost 1 1/2 to 3/4 and in provisions the outcome varied from 1/2 decline to 45c advance.

At intervals the corn market was almost bare of support, and the July delivery in particular seemed to be without friends. July dropped nearly 7 cents, selling for the first time this season at a discount under September.

RISE IN ARGENTINE CORN RESULT OF LEAK

Buenos Aires, July 3.—Recent sharp advances in the price of Argentine corn are attributed to the fact that news leaked out that the League of Agriculturists of Germany had contracted with a Dutch firm for the purchase in Argentina of 1,000,000 tons of corn.

contract is said to be guaranteed by the German government and is to be paid for month by month as the corn arrives out of the proceeds of the German government monopoly of potash and caustic soda. The corn is to be used chiefly for raising pigs in order to remedy the dearth of fatty foodstuffs in Germany. Since the beginning of the year the price of corn has risen to the equivalent of $1.12 per bushel. A million tons at this price would amount to about $4,000,000. Hardly more than a year ago corn was being burned in Argentina for fuel.

Rice.

New Orleans, July 3.—Rough rice, no sales; receipts, 200 sacks; millers' receipts, none.

State Cotton Acreage Is Off Eight Per Cent

Details on the acreage and condition situation with reference to Georgia's cotton crop are contained in a bulletin just issued by the cooperative crop reporting service for Georgia, a union of federal bureau of crop estimates and state department of agriculture. The bulletin is as follows:

Georgia Cotton Acreage.

A reduction of acreage has apparently taken place in every crop reporting district except the third, which is the northeastern section of the state, where some entirely new territory has gone into cotton, which accounts for the increase in that district. In Districts 1 and 2, comprising the north central and northeast section, the decrease is thought to be about 5 per cent. In District 4, or the western section, which is heavily infested by the boll weevil, the loss of acreage amounts to 13 per cent. In District 5, or the central section of the state, only 30 per cent of last year's acreage has been planted. In the eastern district a loss of 17 per cent is shown, while in District 1, which comprises the southwestern section, the loss is 20 per cent. These two districts comprised most of the former sea island acreage, which has almost entirely disappeared. In Districts 7 and 8, the southern and southwestern section, the reduction amounts to about 4 per cent in each.

A straight average of all the reports makes the acreage this year 92 per cent of that last year. A revision of the figures properly weighted indicates an average loss of 8 per cent for the state. This makes the total acreage this year and going on June 25, 4,972,000, 100,000 more than last year. It was intended to be planted, but the shortage of labor combined with the extremely unfavorable weather conditions at planting time prevented the planting of any more than this.

Condition of Cotton.

The condition on June 25, for the state is 83 per cent, an improvement over a month ago which showed a condition of 55 per cent. The crops are universally clean and chopping practically completed over the entire state. The plant is healthy and growing with full vigor under the present conditions. The only complaint noted generally is that the plant is small as the result of the statement of the month ago that the seedling period has been known at this period. The most marked improvement is shown in the cotton in the central section of the state where the improvement ranges from 9 to 23 points. In the central section the loss of acreage amounts to 13 per cent. The latter is undoubtedly due to the large number of weevils present.

A straight average report computed into the acreage estimated, indicates a total crop of 2,195,000 bales, or 10 per cent above the normal abandonment of acreage.

LIMIT ON COTTON GOODS OUTPUT OVER HOLIDAYS

New York, July 3.—Cotton goods buyers are doing very little on new business. The demand is light and there are many uncertainties confronting the trade. Prices are softening in gray goods markets and yarns are now showing signs of declining generally. The underwear and hosiery trades are particularly dull. Goods are not accumulating in first hands, and both underwear and yarn manufacturers incline toward curtailing production as soon as orders are filled. After the holiday the trade looks for an increase in buying on the part of retailers and jobbers and the general attitude of sellers is one of waiting to see how retailers will regard the fall orders they now have on the books and which will be delivered steadily from July forward. Selling agents say the trade is subject to the effect of financial pressure that is affecting all lines of industry and to the reflex effect of a sharp liquidation that has been going on in silks and woolsens, where raw material markets have broken.

Export markets are manifesting much the same uncertainties that are seen in the domestic trade. The ready-to-wear manufacturers are carefully watching the situation in hand and it is felt that when the present hesitation is over with there will be another sharp resumption of buying that will disclose light stocks again. Prices quoted are as follows: Print cloths, 28-inch, 64x64, 15c; 64x60s, 15c; 38 1/2-inch, 64x64, 23c; brown sheetings, southern standard, 27c; denims, 25s, indigo, 44c; tickings, 8-ounce, 55c; prints, 23c; staple ginghams, 27 1/2c; 44-inch, 36x36, 35c and 37 1/2c; in second-hand trading some of these prices may be shaded.

ENGAGEMENTS

BROWN-MELL.

Mr. and Mrs. George M. Brown announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary, to Mr. Brooks Mell, the marriage to take place in the early fall. Miss Brown is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Brown, and one of the brightest and cleverest young women in Atlanta's social life. She is a graduate of Vassar college, the class of 1917, and on her return from college she was appointed secretary of the woman's division of the Georgia Division Council of Defense. She is the granddaughter of the late Senator Joseph E. Brown, who was Georgia's confederate war governor, and on her mother's side she is the granddaughter of the late Samuel Hoyt, a distinguished pioneer citizen. She is the niece of former Governor Joseph M. Brown, of Georgia, and of Mrs. E. L. Conally, Mr. Elijah Brown and Miss Salie Eugenia Brown. Mr. Mell is a graduate of Washington and Lee, from which university he has his degree B. A. He graduated last summer from the Atlanta Law school, winning his law degree from that institution. During the period of the war he won his commission, graduating from the Boston aviation school, and after the war he was a member of the firm of the Mell Realty company.

MOSELEY-BOSWELL.

Mr. and Mrs. Adiel Sherwood Moseley, of Greensboro, announce the engagement of their daughter, Annie Blount, to Mr. Benjamin Clifford Boswell, of Decatur, formerly of Penfield, the wedding to take place in September.

JONES-COOPER.

Mrs. William Hill Jones announces the engagement of her daughter, Annie, to Mr. Clarence Andrew Cooper, the marriage to take place in September.

SMITH-LASSETER.

Mrs. Ira A. Smith announces the engagement of her daughter, Helen Frances, to Mr. Dillard Brown Lasseter, formerly of Cordele, Ga., but now of the American consular service, Tien Tsin, China. home was thrown together and decorated elaborately with garden flowers, southern amilax, palms and ferns; the stairway was draped with garlands of smilax and clusters of daisies.

The drawing room, where the ceremony took place, was decorated with picturesque draperies of smilax and cut flowers, and an altar arrangement was of ferns, palms and cathedral candelabra.

The maid of honor, Miss Floye Bekridge, wore pink georgette, elaborately embroidered and hat to match. She carried a shower bouquet of pink roses and swansonia.

Little Misses Miriam Norman and Martha Virginia Edge, flower girls, preceded the maid of honor. They wore pink organdie dresses and hats to match and carried baskets of pink roses and swansonia.

Mr. Julian Youmans, of College Park, was best man.

A beautiful musical program was rendered by Mrs. Lochridge, pianist, and Mr. Mueller, violinist, just before the ceremony. Mrs. Edwards sang, accompanied by Mrs. Edwin Aiken. Mrs. Edwards wore a French organdie and picture hat, wearing a corsage of pink roses and swansonia.

The bride's book was presided over by Mrs. Otis Lafayette Dunn, of Savannah, a cousin of the bride. She was becomingly gowned in lavender organdie, with hat to match, and wore a corsage of roses and swansonia.

Edward Cook, wore her traveling suit of midnight blue polart, with blue taffeta hat and accessories to match. She carried a bouquet of roses and swansonia. Her only ornament was a platinum pin, the gift of the groom.

Immediately after the ceremony, there was an elaborate reception. Mrs. D. B. Kendrick and Mrs. E. E. Cunningham assisted in receiving the guests.

Mrs. Cook, mother of the bride, was handsome in a gown of black grape meteor heavily beaded, with corsage of orchids and swansonia. The bride's table was covered with Madeira lace and the bride's cake was the center decoration. Silver candelabra adorned each end. Smilax festooned the table and green and white mints continued the color scheme.

Serving punch were Misses Vione Rankin and Thelma Eskridge. Refreshments were served by Mesdames J. L. Spill, Hunter, Smith, Edmund P. Jordan, Gordon Wells and Miss Florence Wells.

Mr. and Mrs. Wall left on a wedding trip to Asheville and other points of interest in North Carolina.

Among the out-of-town guests were: Mrs. F. H. Perry, Mrs. C. J. Norzian, Miss Florence Wells, of Covington; Mr. and Mrs. Lester A. Macon, of Social Circle; Mr. W. E. Wall, Sr., of Crawford, Ga.; Mrs. Otis L. Dunn, of Savannah; Miss Martha Hogan, of Hogansville, Ga.

Mrs. Samuel Bass Hatcher, of Columbus, and Mr. Barnard Alexander Boykin, of Atlanta, which took place on Tuesday evening at the home of the bride on Second avenue, in Columbus.

The interest of friends throughout the state centered in the event, and there were a number of out-of-town guests.

The attendants were Miss Flor-

Jackson-Baldwin.

Much interest is manifested in the engagement of Charles F. Baldwin (more familiarly known to his many friends as "Jack" Baldwin) and Miss Gladys Jackson, of Miami, Florida.

The beautiful and accomplished daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Jackson, a prominent family in Miami.

The marriage will be a beautiful event at the First Baptist church in Miami, and the young couple after their return from their wedding tour, will reside in Miami, where Mr. Baldwin is prominently connected in business.

ence Boykin, the groom's sister, Edith McKensie, of Montezuma; Clark, of Jacksonville, Fla., a sister of the bride, matron of honor; Miss Helen Dudley, of Columbus; Edith McKensie, of Montezuma; Margaret Bullock, of Columbus; Alva Tupper, of Jacksonville, bridesmaid; Mr. John P. Gilchrist, best man; Messrs. Franklin Mikell, Robert S. Raiford, Rhodes Haverly, of Atlanta; Samuel B. Hatcher, Jr., Madden Hatcher, Lemuel D. Hill, Ben T. Swift, of Columbus, groomsmen; Misses Mary Flournoy, wife of the bride, and Sarah Crowell Bullock, ribbon bearers; Miss Margaret Litchfield, of Montgomery, flower girl.

The ceremony took place in the drawing room before a foliage altar of palms decorated with clusters of Easter lilies and above draperies of smilax were drawn from the ceiling to the tall silver candelabra at each side, producing a canopy effect. The mantle was banked with ferns and wall baskets were filled with swansonia and white daisies. The music was of Easter lilies, snapdragons and double peonies showered with swansonia.

The matron of honor, maid of honor and bridesmaids were gowned in pink organdie and cream lace. Each carried, suspended from her arm by blue ribbons, a leghorn hat shaped to stimulate a basket and filled with pink gladioli, lilies and marguerites.

The ribbon-bearers and flower girl wore pink organdie gowns and wreaths of flowers in their hair.

Mrs. Hatcher, the bride's mother, was gowned in white Chantilly lace. Mrs. J. M. Madden, the bride's grandmother, was gowned in black satin and lace. Mrs. B. M. Boykin, of Atlanta, the groom's mother, wore black tulle and jet.

A handsome reception followed the ceremony.

The house was elaborately decorated with palms, amilax and June flowers. The stairway was decorated at intervals with huge clusters of pink and blue hydrangeas alternating with baskets of lilies tied with blue satin ribbon and pedestal vases at the foot of the stairs were filled with the same colorful variety of blooms.

The bride's table was elegantly appointed, its cover of filet lace and Madras and its centerpiece a silver basket of double white phlox, lilies of the valley and pink roses.

At one of the tables was a silver basket of Easter lilies, pink roses and snapdragons, and at the other end was the wedding cake embossed with pink and white flowers.

Punch was served in the living room, which was decorated with hydrangeas and lilies. Misses Sue Palmer, Margaret Andrews, Dorothy Cargill, of Americus, presided. The porch was electrically lighted.

Independence Freedom, Power

The Glorious Fourth never offered deeper significance of freedom and independence than today. Our United States has so effectively lifted the bondage of the oppressed countries of the Old World with the same heroism and spirit with which we gained our freedom of '76.

Our own absolute freedom was never so recognized as today, when our country leads the world in power, prosperity, commercial prominence and world-wide recognition and respect.

We join with pride in celebrating the day as a tribute to our National Spirit.

to match, presenting a rainbow effect. Miss Ruth Smith, blue; Miss Frances Marshall, blue; Miss Billie Lloyd, yellow, and Miss Elsie Lather, yellow. They carried bouquets of pink roses tied with tulle. Miss Annie Woodruff, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and was beautifully gowned in a dress of pink tulle, and carried pink roses, showered with swan-sonia.

Little Miss Dorothy Withers, the ring bearer, wore a dainty dress of white with pink ribbons. She carried the ring in a miniature bouquet of pink roses. Mr. John P. Brand acted as best man.

The bride, who entered with her father, Mr. James Edward Woodruff, wore a lovely white gown of real lace over duchess satin. Her veil which was coronet shaped was in place with orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a brooch, the gift of the groom. She carried pink roses, showered with lily of the valley. Shortly after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Snyder left for New York and other points of interest, after which they will be at home to their many friends on Lucile avenue.

To Recent Bride.

Miss Bernice Cook, whose marriage to Mr. Forrest Adair Wall was solemnized Wednesday at high noon, was the central figure at a number of parties.

Miss Floye Eskridge entertained at bridge and a surprise shower Monday afternoon at her home on Lucile avenue.

The house was tastefully decorated and a delightful luncheon was served. Miss Eskridge was assisted in receiving and entertaining by her sisters, Miss Thelma Eskridge and Mrs. Frank Eskridge. The guests included Misses Florence Wells, of Covington; Veone Rankin, Helen Cook, Floye and Thelma Eskridge, Mesdames J. P. Swann, C. O. Burns, Capers Andrews, Edmund P. Jordan, Otis L. Dunn, of Savannah; Gordon Wells, Cester A. Malcom, of Social Circle; Hunter C. Smith, J. S. Gordon and Frank Eskridge.

On Saturday evening Mrs. O. S. Brown gave a delightful surprise bridge party at the home of the bride-elect.

Mrs. Hunter Cooper Smith entertained very graciously with a matinee party, followed by a light luncheon.

The bride party was very delightfully entertained at the home of the bride on Tuesday evening, immediately following the rehearsal.

Shumate-Carter.
Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Coogler announce the marriage of their daughter, Sadie Evans Shumate, to William Benjamin Carter. The ceremony was attended only by the immediate families. Rev. S. R. Belk officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter left immediately after the ceremony for an extended trip through the north and east. On their return they will reside for a short time at the home of the bride's parents in Kirkwood, and later will motor to their home in Florida.

Norris-Carter.
The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Norris, of near Zebulon, Ga., on Wednesday evening, June 20, Miss Gladys Norris and Dr. Robert Leon Carter, of Atlanta, were married. Rev. J. D. Milton, of Zebulon, officiating.

A host of relatives and friends to their friends at Thomaston, Ga., after July 15. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Carter, of Measville, Ga., and is a young man of sterling worth. He served in the world's war, entering at first lieutenant and returning from abroad as captain after which he resumed his profession as physician and surgeon in Atlanta.

Rice-Garwood.

Mr. and Mrs. John W. Rice announce the marriage of their daughter, Valeria, to Mr. Ralph Garwood. The wedding was a quiet one, taking place at high noon, Wednesday, June 20, at the home of the bride's parents. The ceremony was witnessed by the immediate families of the bride and groom. Rev. B. R. Lacy officiating.

Miss Rice was married in her going-a-suit of navy blue tricot, and her bouquet was of pink roses. Immediately after the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Garwood left for Asheville and other North Carolina resorts.

The bride, a charming young girl, has just recently finished school. She spent one year at college in Athens, Ga., after attending girls' high. She is of an old Atlanta family; her grandfather, Mr. A. Rice, was a pioneer and most influential citizen. As a young girl she was an officer in the Dolly Madison chapter, Children of the Revolution, and she is now a charter member of the Colonial Daughters.

Mr. Garwood was formerly of Cartersville, Ga., but recently came to Atlanta, and became associated in business with the Dodson Co.

Both have many friends who are interested in their marriage.

Trimble-Fairbanks.

The wedding of Miss Ruby Trimble and Mr. Donald E. Fairbanks was solemnized Saturday evening, June 19, at 8 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Hoston Trimble, in East Point.

The Rev. T. G. Linkous, of the Christian church, performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by relatives and a few close friends.

Miss Grace Redwine, the maid of honor, wore a becoming gown of pink georgette and carried pink roses.

M. T. R. Hammond was best man. The bride entered the living room with her brother, Mr. Howard Trimble. She was handsomely gowned in white georgette and carried a bouquet of white roses and swan-sonia.

Mrs. John Hoston Trimble, mother of the bride, was gowned in black georgette, a corsage of sweet peas completing the costume. The altar was of palms and ferns and the parlors were festooned with southern smilax.

The bridal party entered to the Mendelssohn wedding march played by Miss Mignon Spencer.

For Mrs. Smith.
Mrs. Frank Reid entertained at a bridge-tee Friday afternoon, complimenting Mrs. A. F. Smith, of Brunswick, Ga., who is visiting Mrs. M. D. Keybold. The apartments were decorated with summer flowers.

The top score prize was a home-made cake, and the honor guest was presented with a piece of lingerie. A box of stationery was given as consolation prize.

Mrs. Reid was gowned in white georgette crepe. Mrs. Smith wore a gown of dark blue georgette crepe.

Invited to meet the honor guest were Mrs. Keybold, Mrs. H. W. Beers, Mrs. Gilbert Beers, Mrs. Frank Berry, Mrs. W. A. Gossett, Mrs. J. R. Gossett, Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. J. C. Landers, Mrs. Linton Smith and Mrs. Edward Chesbire.

Mrs. J. R. Gossett will entertain at bridge-luncheon Tuesday, July 6, in honor of Mrs. Smith.

On Wednesday, July 7, Mrs. L. W. Rogers gives a bridge-tee at the Atlanta Woman's club in compliment to this popular visitor.

AMERICA'S INDEPENDENCE is evidenced in the celebration of the Great Day—in the individual enjoyment of it in a thousand ways, which take the loyal and rejoicing to the Land of Little Care, after rewarding work—well done.

America won the victory of independence with cannon balls, a long time ago—but our true independence has been built up by common sense . . . each man steadily, quietly going to work, giving his best to the task at hand, in an honest determination to be of service to his fellow man.

Our joyful Fourth is ever the biggest event in annual history, because it not only bespeaks our deep love of country . . . but reveals an undeniable enthusiasm, a national vivacity, a genuine joyousness on all sides that will continually sweep America forward to still greater heights of Loyalty, Love, Independence and Freedom!

Mrs. A. O. Granger has returned to Cartersville, after spending some time with her daughter, Mrs. W. A. Hansell.

Mrs. John L. Hudson entertained the Ladies Aid society of the Presbyterian church at her home on Woodlawn avenue Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. Sterling Bryan entertained a number of friends delightfully with a spend-the-day party Thursday at her home on South Moreland avenue.

The members of the Christian Endeavor society enjoyed a moonlight picnic at Grant park Thursday evening.

A wedding of interest to a wide circle of friends was that of Miss Grace Dobbs and Mr. James Avery, which was solemnized at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. J. W. Dobbs, Saturday, June 19.

Picnic and Dance.

The Young Women's Hebrew association will give a picnic and dance at Grant park pavilion Wednesday, July 2. All members are requested to be on hand promptly at 5:30 o'clock. There will be a spread for members and their parents, this to be followed by a number of games for which handsome prizes will be awarded. Dancing will commence at 8 o'clock.

Camping Party.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. L. Fife, of Fayetteville, Ga., will give a camping party July 3, for their daughter, Elizabeth, who is a student at Wesleyan college.

The guests invited are four Wesleyan girls, Miss Sarah Vaughan, of Cartersville; Miss Ruth Conn, of Milledgeville; Miss Julia Colson, of McRae; Miss Alice Fulcher, of Waynesboro, and Miss Juanita Cummings, of Alamo, who is a student at Brenau.

Georgia Girl Wins Honors.

Miss Moseley Ashford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ashford, of Afton, Ga., who has been studying at Clark university, Worcester, Mass., the past winter, received masters degree from that institution on June 15. Her work in philosophy there has been of such unusually high character that she has been awarded the fellowship in Yale university.

It is remarkable that one so young should have gained such distinction, and her many friends will be interested to learn of her success.

Birthday Party.

Little Miss Margaret Walker, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Y. Walker, entertained a large number of her little friends from 4 to 6 o'clock at a delightful party on Wednesday afternoon, June 30, at their home on Myrtle street, in celebration of her fifth birthday.

The color scheme of pink was carried out in the decorations of the house. The table in the dining room was adorned with sweet peas, dragon lilies and unshaded pink candles.

Those present were Margaret Walker, Eugenia Snow, Elizabeth Walker, Flossie Hill, Sarah Lane, Frances Fair, Grace Varden, Leval Olliff, Martha Leon Olliff, Nellie Emmerson, Caroline Lyndon, Charlotte Regan, Jean Fox, Louis Fox, Roslyn Simmons, William Howard, Gertrude Baker, Thomas Nalley, Madeleine Barton, James Barton, Richard Wendell and Margaret Wade.

Mrs. George D. Snow, sister of Mrs. Walker, assisted in entertaining the children.

Argentine Club Dance.

The Fourth of July holiday will be celebrated by the Argentine club with a special dance this evening at the club hall, Segado's, on East Pine street.

Account of the shortness of time before this dance, no invitation cards will be issued, but the friends of the club, particularly those of the other dancing clubs, are invited to attend.

Music will be furnished by the club's regular orchestra, selected players, and dancing will be enjoyed from 9 until 12 o'clock.

Mrs. Morgan Entertains.

Mrs. Eglon T. Morgan entertained at a beautifully appointed luncheon Wednesday at her home in honor of Mr. Fred Smith of Knoxville, Texas, formerly of Atlanta. There were eight guests, conventional friends of Mrs. Smith. White and green was the color scheme.

The tea table centerpiece was a basket of white flowers, the halves tied with green tulle and wood flowers in profusion decorated the house.

Parties for

Miss Buchanan's Guests.

Miss Lola Buchanan has returned from Winder, Ga. Miss Lurine Wilson, of Athens; Miss Kathleen Johnson, of Griffin, accompanied her guests for several days. Mr. C. B. Miller will entertain at a theater party in honor of the guests.

Mr. Linton Buchanan will honor the guests with a dance this evening. Mr. William Baldwin will entertain at the East Lake Country club, and Mr. Lewis Swann will also entertain at the club for these attractive visitors.

Shipp-Rosser.

A marriage of much interest to their friends is that of Miss Evie Lee Rosser and Mr. Frank James Shipp, both of Atlanta.

They were quietly married on Thursday evening, June 24, at the home of Elder B. W. Spire, pastor of the Seventh Day Adventist church, in the presence of a few friends. The bride wore a pretty suit of tan tulle.

Mr. and Mrs. Shipp are at home to their friends at the home of the bride's parents, 48 East Georgia avenue.

At Glen Eden.

Mrs. F. M. Robinson entertained with a picnic last Saturday afternoon and evening at her summer home, Glen Eden, in compliment to her Sunday school class of young men, the Royal Guards of the First Christian church.

Wives and friends of the Royal Guards and a few friends of the hostess were included in the number present which was about one hundred. A more ideal place than Glen Eden could not be found for a picnic, its natural beauty even surpassing the lawns and shrubbery

Miss Akin, State Chairman, Appoints Committee Chairmen

Miss Stella Akin, of Savannah, president of the Georgia Federation of Business and Professional Women, spent several days in the city the past week, and she announces several important appointments of chairmen of standing committees these chairmen named by the state president at the executive board meeting in Augusta last Saturday, and ratified by the members of the board.

Dr. Marian Kershaw, of Augusta, was made chairman of the legislative committee; Miss Dora Menden, of Savannah, publicity committee, and Mrs. M. P. Tagg, of Atlanta, membership and organization.

It is proposed to include on the publicity committee a newspaper woman from each city where there is a federated club, and on the other committees a similarly unrepresentative representation.

which surrounds the cottages on the Robinson estate.

The main attraction of the afternoon was the large concrete swimming pool while tennis, bowling and croquet divided honors for sport.

As the evening shadows lengthened a large social band sounded its merry peal, and the pioneers appeared in a few minutes from all directions, assembling in the vicinity of the flag pole, here after the lowering of "Old Glory," a delicious picnic supper was served. Canoeing on the lake, choral singing and the prophesies of a gypsy fortune teller rounded out a perfect evening.

The officers of the Royal Guard class are R. N. Pettis, president; D. H. Walker, vice president; W. R. Oliver, secretary; E. W. Baker, treasurer, and E. O. Pannell, assistant teacher.

Athletic Club to Celebrate At East Lake Country Club.

Elaborate entertainment is announced for the celebration of independence day at the East Lake Country club, the celebration to take place Monday, July 5.

The program will open with a barbecue at 1 o'clock.

There will be music on the lawn and the banks of the lake from 4:45 to 6:30.

Water sports will begin at 6 o'clock and will last an hour or more.

... CURRENT EVENTS FROM A WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW ...

By ISMA DOOLY

The Consistency of Men

Simultaneously with the news flashed from the center of the national democratic convention last Wednesday that the membership of the national executive committee was doubled so as to give places to women, there came the news in another department of the morning paper that the Georgia senate had defeated a suffrage measure.

Yet somebody in satirical vein once said, "Consistency, thy name is woman." While the men representing the national democratic party of the nation, seeing that nearly every one of the thirty-five states which have given women the right to vote are republican states, and, desiring to give the women of the democratic party the right to vote, thus balancing the forces of the party, find that certain groups of men would prefer the sacrifice of interest of the party rather than to give women the human right of a voice in the affairs of men.

This situation might as well be seen as it is. To deny women the right to vote now becomes a political party matter, and cuts down the democratic vote in virtually every southern state—every state where the democratic party prevails.

It is a matter in the south today, which calls upon the women of the south to use all they have of their influence, to make the men of the states opposing suffrage see the effect of such opposition upon the life of the political party the cause of which they have always espoused.

True, this is not the highest place upon which the appeal or the influence should be brought to bear, but at present it is the most important and the most practical one.

That the admission so far of women in the councils of the democratic party have not brought about any radical changes or influences, is partially proven in the deliberations of the women members as they have so far progressed in San Francisco. The woman's bureau of labor of the democratic party, from which might be expected perhaps radical requests, submitted a very conservative report as follows:

"We affirm the right of collective bargaining between employers and employees through representatives of their own choosing. We approve also the national industrial councils established by employers and employees within the various industries, the findings of which shall have the effect of ordinary collective agreements, but not of judicial decisions subject to compulsory enforcement.

"We insist on the abolition of the labor of children under 14 years, and that children between 14 and 18 shall be permitted to work only after passing examination by local school and health authorities, assuring proper standards of health and education.

"We affirm our belief in the principles of the democratic platform of 1916, and again urge the general adoption of the eight-hour day.

"We believe that wages should be put on the basis of service, not of sex, and that minimum wages should be fixed which will insure to all wage-earners a proper standard of health, comfort and efficiency.

"We urge that the federal trade commission be given greater powers over the basic food industries of life.

"We advocate the development of a national system of employment offices under control of federal and state boards. To meet the problems of seasonal requirements of agriculture we urge the organization of a voluntary labor corps for harvesting with transportation subsidies.

"We advocate the extension and development of the bureau of women in industry established by the democratic party in the department of labor. We also urge the appointment of women on all government boards and tribunals dealing with industry and labor.

"We recommend the protection of womanhood and infancy according to the best modern experience. A resolution urging the establishment of a department of education, with a cabinet officer at its head, also was adopted.

A careful review of this report would not seem to threaten dangers ahead, and up to the present moment the women of the democratic committee have been more than conservative and reserved in their general attitude.

They are composed of the leading women of the nation, a committee woman from each one of the democratic states. They have been selected from the standpoint of their prominence, ability and their previous service to their country along every line.

Whether or not the thirty-sixth state ratifies the Susan B. Anthony amendment, and all the women of the nation vote, the women of this state, and in every other state, can do their best by putting all of their influence and power, organized and individually, back of the democratic party which in the recent convention have so sound-mindedly and wholeheartedly admitted women into their open councils and into their most executive councils.

Georgia's Opportunity To Better Conditions

In an able editorial entitled "Georgia's Opportunity," The Savannah Press of recent date, in urging that the general assembly of Georgia ratify the Susan B. Anthony amendment, says:

"Arguments that once stood against woman suffrage obtain no longer. Women themselves have exploded many of the bug-bear theories that opponents to equal suffrage once held against them. They have stepped into public life, and, although without a vote, have made their influence felt in many beneficial ways. They have demonstrated capability to conduct public affairs. Their aid is sought by men. In national political conventions they are becoming important factors."

Particularly bearing upon education this point is made:

"Our children are in need of greater school facilities, and when the last school bond issue was to be voted upon it was largely due to the work of the women that it had a successful outcome. They were the ones who went on the streets and convinced the men that in order to give the children a proper chance in life that they must have educational advantages."

"Would it not have been far better, and if the dignity of the women is to be considered, far more dignified for the women to have been in the position to go to the polls and cast their vote without having to work so hard in a roundabout way to gain what was and is still needed to educate the future voters of the country?"

This experience has, within the last week, been repeated, when the women teachers of Savannah had gone from door to door, office to office, in an effort to secure a sufficient number of signatures necessary to petition for the bond election."

Conditions in Atlanta and other Georgia municipalities are the same. The schools need enlarging, curriculum need extension, teachers need more pay, not only to live upon, but to continue their own efficiency, for pedagogy is a progressive profession.

The women are naturally and logically interested in the education of the child of the community—the nation—and to take from them their right of voice in the program of the child, is too short-sighted to believe. Let those who are looking to the interest of the people of Georgia, as The Press, "consider well the rights due the women of the state, these citizens who, while never having lawfully been given the title, are always working for the advancement and welfare of all of the state."

Thrift Placed On High Plane.

"Only normal conditions can bring economic peace, but if in the meantime we practice the same sacrifice and thrift which we did during the war and look upon the situation not from the pessimistic standpoint, but as an opportunity, we may tide over this period. Eight million men died for a larger world. We must forget the old evils and look toward better things," was the statement made by Miss Florence Ward, of the United States department of agriculture, when she addressed the General Federation of Women's Clubs, at their annual holding last week in Des Moines, Iowa. Her subject was "Thrift and the Reduction of the High Cost of Living."

Miss Ward stressed the importance of the economic situation, pointing out that the currency is inflated, that production has been curtailed during and since the war, and that the withdrawal of agricultural areas of the world has played a large part in the economic havoc.

Congressman Horace M. Townner, of Illinois, speaking at the same session, charged that labor was demanding half work and double pay, thus raising prices.

Dean Sarah Louise Arnold, of Simmons college, Boston, stressed the application of the spirit of brotherhood to the economic and labor problems of the day.

"We must come to the other side," she said. "We must come to a common understanding of what things are good, just, fair and simple. Find the desirable things. Don't sit and turn your thumbs while manufacturers decide what we are to wear. The girl who slaves a whole week and then goes to a department store and buys a cheap flimsy Georgeanna waist lent to blame. Train her to see the really beautiful things are the simple things of life."

Blame For Social Laxity Laid to Dress of Women

In his baccalaureate address at the commencement exercises of Princeton university, President Hibben stated:

"When American mothers send their daughters half dressed to evening functions, anything may happen. I would not like to be so ungallant as to put all the blame on the women, but young men are only human, and while they share in the responsibility for modern laxity, it has its beginning in the dress of the girls of today."

"In our social relations," warned Dr. Hibben, "we are weakly allowing ourselves to be ruled by the goddess of folly, slaves in her domain to the dress, the modern dance, the modern music and modern manners of today are symptoms that indicate that somehow in this age we have lost our bearings, and that the old values of life, once so highly prized, have been forgotten."

Another Responsible. While Dr. Hibben thus spoke from the rostrum of Princeton university, Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker told the federated women of the nation at their biennial in Des Moines, Iowa, that more sympathy should exist between old and young people, and that mothers and daughters should be closer together.

Both of these wise people—both leaders in their interests—place a serious responsibility upon the mothers of today.

Modern social customs and modern dress have at present expressed a decadent condition among the young people of the country.

Mary's mother does not always know where Mary is "at," nor what little Mary has "on."

When she does find out she consoles herself with the fact that "Jane, the next door neighbor," was out at the same time that Jane had very little "on" except the powder and paint on her face; therefore, why should Mary's mother worry?

Mother Is Blamed. This lack of standard and strength on mother's part is where much of the blame of modern conditions lies—and neither the church, the state, the school, the reformatory or society can effect a reform unless mother—not mother's next door neighbor—begins it at home.

you, and have a general talk over the game and its developments," he wrote to Mrs. Annie Adair Foster, who recently visited New York, and had a letter of introduction to Mr. Work.

"I formulated certain questions in my mind; that I could ask, when I met Mr. Work and had a very interesting conference with him," stated Mrs. Foster on her return from New York.

"He cleared up many things in my mind which were not entirely clear about bridge, and explained many of the things in his own books which had been a trifle complex to me."

Like every one who masters a subject, he can make it clear to others in the simplest fashion. He is very conversant in his acceptance of the game which to him is a science.

Mr. Work has been for years, and still is, chairman of the governing board of the New York Whist club."

To Have Perfect Skin Throughout the Summer

This is the season when she who would have a lily-white complexion should turn her thoughts to resouling her skin. A friend of the summer girl. Nothing so effectively overcomes the soiling effects of sun, wind, dust and dirt. The wax literally absorbs the scorched, discolored, withered or coarsened "war" skin. Bringing forth a brand-new skin, clear, soft and girlishly beautiful. It also unclogs the pores, removes blackheads and increases the skin's breathing capacity.

An ounce of resouled wax, obtainable at any drug store, applied nightly like cold cream, and washed off mornings, will gradually improve even the worst complexion. There is nothing better for the removal of tan, freckles or blotches.—(adv.)

Atlanta in Need Of More Places For Recreation

By Isma Dooly.

Atlanta is rich in spirit, and accumulated wealth and properties, rich in good-will and hospitality, but she is poverty-stricken in the matter of open-air amusements and recreations, and there is no more desolate place, imaginable to the stranger in the city than Atlanta on Sunday.

Atlanta offers nothing on Sunday, but her churches, which everybody should attend, but the custom of all-day Sunday services no longer prevails, and there does not seem any idea on the part of anybody of reviving them, good as they might be.

Atlanta's home facilities at present, for thousands of people, are not such as to induce people staying home all day, and naturally in this climate, people crave the out-of-doors—the air especially in the afternoon and evenings.

Where Can They Go? The conditions at Piedmont park on Sundays—a beautiful little park it is—exploit Atlanta's limited facilities. It was so crowded last Sunday that people were uncomfortably close together in every part of the park, while the swimming pool presented the same condition.

The same prevailed at Grant park, and people were wandering on the streets aimlessly, with every place closed to them.

No music sounded from a bandstand anywhere; there were no evidences that Atlanta was a hospitable city. She is literally closed to everything on Sunday, and nothing is done for the recreation or joy of her people, who must toil the six days of the week preceding Sunday.

On week days the playgrounds are open in some places—but such playgrounds!

The two little parks are open and the movies. People who patronize the movies the afternoon are appalled to see young mothers come strolling into the hot, badly ventilated theaters, carrying infants, who cry out in heat and discomfort.

"Does she not know enough not to bring her child into this atmosphere?" the sophisticated ask. Some of them do, but they are tired; they have worked all day and were hot at home, and they went to get out and get some recreation—something to interest them.

They took the first car that passed the door; came to town, for where else was there to go where they could hear music or anything else, so they went to the "movie," whether it was good or bad.

I do not believe Atlanta can afford to say much these days about censoring the movies or censoring any of her places of amusements, for she gives none. She forces her people into the movies, where they pay for what they get, and no one is going to blame anybody, the mother with the baby, or the young girl, of the children, for they are in the state of "all dressed up and nowhere to go," continually.

On Sunday and every day in the week, Atlanta is poverty-stricken for places of out-of-door recreation.

To remedy this condition is one of the provisions proposed in the new charter. Therefore, let every woman in Atlanta go and register, so she can vote for the charter and all its proposed reforms.

Find Ceiling of Glass.

From New York Sun and Herald.
Columbus, July 3.—If at times in the last sixty years the deliberations of the Ohio legislators seemed to indicate the presence of brain cobwebs there was reason for it, and all may be forgiven now.

When the state house custodian ordered a thorough cleaning of the senate chamber workmen found the ceiling to be made largely of glass, but so thick was the coating of dust and debris that the present generation had supposed it to be of solid wood.

The ceiling had not been cleaned since 1853. Four truck loads of dirt were removed from the ceiling. One of the consequences of the cleaning will be to reduce Ohio's electric light bill, since light will now penetrate the rooms.

This column will be published in The Constitution every week. It is conducted by an ex-service man for the benefit of ex-service men. Through co-operation with the different government bureaus, all information published in this column will be authentic.

Questions on war risk insurance, compensation, vocational training, or any other matter of interest to ex-service men should be addressed to W. A. Higgins, The Constitution, Atlanta, Ga. This column is also open to relatives of ex-service men and the bureaus of war risk insurance will, should necessity arise, render private legal opinions free of charge in connection with these matters.

The questions and answers given below treat with war risk insurance. John H. Folsom, director of war risk insurance for this section, has answered the following questions:

C. A. S. Macon: How long can I carry war risk insurance in term form after am discharged from the service?

Answer: You can carry it five years after date of declaration of peace.

J. D. C. Columbus: Do you advise converting war risk insurance at once?

Answer: It is cheaper to convert your war risk insurance into permanent form immediately, as you secure advantage of lower rate and secure maturity of the cash value.

F. M. J. Athens: Has term insurance any cash value?

Answer: No. The term rate provides pay for actual protection afforded only. Any time after first year you can borrow 94 per cent of the cash value on your converted insurance.

W. A. H. Rome: Will the government pay dividends on converted insurance?

Answer: All converted government insurance is participating and will participate in such gains and savings as may be determined by the director of the bureau of war risk insurance. Dividends will be derived in exactly the same manner in which they are derived in old line companies, the government using the same mortality experience table.

J. L. W. Savannah: Which policy do you advise an ex-service man to take?

Answer: This is a matter to be determined individually by the individual marital condition, also his financial condition, and no set rule can be applied.

L. D. N. Brunswick: Is physical examination necessary when reinstating and converting term insurance?

Answer: No physical examination is required by the government, either on term or converted insurance, provided the applicant is in as good health as he was at the date of discharge or expiration of the grace period.

H. McD. A. Savannah: Do I have to reinstate and convert my full amount of insurance?

Answer: No. You can reinstate and convert any amount from $1,000 up in multiples of $500.

P. N. W. Rome: I applied for $5,000 insurance while in the service. Can I now convert that amount to $10,000?

Answer: No. You cannot carry more insurance than you applied for while in the service.

W. A. M. Marietta: Is it necessary to secure the permission of the beneficiary in order to make change?

Answer: No. The insured may change his beneficiary as often as he desires without the consent of the previously named beneficiary.

A. D. L. Rome: Is converted insurance payable in a lump sum if you so desire, but the term insurance which you carried while in service is still payable in monthly installments.

C. L. McK. West Point: Is it a fact that government insurance is free from taxation?

Answer: Yes. The proceeds of all government insurance are exempt from taxation.

The party consists of many prominent Atlantans. In the party will be Mrs. James O. Lewis, Miss M. Lewis, Mrs. N. D. Perot, Dr. Thomas H. Johnson, James Lewis, J. T. Davenport, Mrs. Armand May, J. Strassberger, Richard Horwitz, Mrs. W. H. Quarterman, Mrs. Pauline May, Miss Elizabeth Coker, Mrs. Elmer Hill, Miss Mary Jane Hill, Miss Margaret Massengale, Miss Mary Brown Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. St. Elmo Massengale, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Douglas and many others.

Aside from the large number of independent travelers who have planned trips abroad this summer, perhaps one of the largest touring parties to make a complete tour of Europe will sail from New York on July 17, on the steamship "Lapland."

Wallace Reid and Bebe Daniels in Big Picture At Rialto This Week

The Screen's Greatest Comedy Stars Will Be Seen in "Sick Abed," a Play Filled With Laughs.

Wallace Reid and Bebe Daniels are coming to the Rialto for a week's engagement. Monday in their newest farce, "Sick Abed," and that's about all that is necessary to tell their thousands of admirers in Atlanta, for when these two clever young people are co-starred in a picture, it's a foregone conclusion that it's going to be some picture, and packed with good, clean humor from beginning to end. "Sick Abed" concerns one Reginald Jay, who gets himself into laughable complications through trying to help an old friend of his father's out of a scrape. The latter has earned the wrath of his jealous wife because he went to a roadhouse with a certain lady customer of his firm. Reginald is wanted as star witness in the pending divorce suit. To escape, he feigns sick and a pretty nurse is assigned to attend him. Not only does Reggie put over the deception successfully, but he wins the nurse in the bargain.

Vivacious Bebe Daniels figures as the nurse and an excellent comedy teammate for Mr. Reid. Winifred Greenwood, John Stepping and Tully Marshall are also in the supporting cast.

The management also announces the showing of the new Mutt and Jeff cartoon, "The Tango Dancers," and the new Paramount Magazine. Real, it's going to be a big week at the Rialto, so don't miss it.

Will Be Seen As "Baby Vampire" in "Dangerous To Men" at Forsyth Theater.

VIOLA DANA Forsyth patrons are going to have a chance to see this beautiful star in her latest and most vampirish picture, when she opens three days' engagement on Monday in "Dangerous To Men," one of the cleverest and most entertaining photoplays that will be seen in Atlanta this season. The costumes worn by Miss Dana in this production are conceded to be the most alluring and beautiful ever shown in pictures. In addition to the feature picture, the management announces the showing of a brand-new feature comedy, entitled "The Bashful Blacksmith," and the Fox News Weekly.

Argentine Club Dance.

The first regular dance of the month will be held by the Argentine club on Thursday evening of this week, July 8. This dance is given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Everett, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Everett, formerly resided in Atlanta, and Mr. Everett was president of the Argentine club when social activities were suspended for the duration of the war in 1918, and this is their first visit to the club since that time.

Dancing will be enjoyed from 9 until 12 o'clock, and every member who can possibly be present is earnestly requested to do so. It is hoped that a large number of those who were members several years ago will attend to greet Mr. and Mrs. Everett.

While in Atlanta, Mr. and Mrs. Everett will be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. Hines Lanier, at their home, 428 Peachtree street.

The entertainment committee also announces that the annual picnic to Warm Springs will be given by the club next Sunday, July 11, leaving Atlanta at 7:30 a. m. via the Southern railway. Details of this picnic will be sent the members the first part of the week.

For Miss Bartlett.

Miss Lillie Stanton entertained at a box party in honor of Miss Gertrude Bartlett, a bride-elect of July, at the Lyric theatre Saturday afternoon. Those present were: Miss Mary Curston, Miss Irene Blair, Miss Pearl Blair, Miss Gertrude Bartlett, Miss Elsie Bartlett, Miss Warner Matson, Miss Esther Swann, Mrs. Ramsey, Mrs. John L. Harper, Mrs. Carl Bartlett and Miss Lillie Stanton.

Junior Memorial Association Reorganized.

The Junior Memorial association was reorganized under the auspices of the Atlanta Ladies' Memorial association on Wednesday afternoon by Mrs. William A. Wright, president of the Ladies' Memorial association, and Miss Willie Fort Williams, corresponding secretary.

Miss Williams was appointed director, and a full complement of officers were elected, all of them descendants of distinguished southern patriots.

The officers elected for the following year are: Miss Ailie Stephens, president, who is the granddaughter of the late General Clement A. Evans; Miss Sarah Douglas, vice president, who is a granddaughter of Captain W. O. Fugate, of La Grange; Miss Janice Morgan, who is a granddaughter of Major "Red" and Mrs. James H. Morgan; Miss Lullia Johnston, treasurer, is the granddaughter of Captain George Thompson, of Virginia.

The meetings are to be held the last Wednesday of each month at the home of Mrs. William A. Wright, on East Fifteenth street.

After the business was completed, delightful refreshments were served.

Straw Ride and Picnic.

The Y. M. S. A. club will give their annual straw ride and picnic to Lake Bennett July 5. The truck will leave the Jewish Educational alliance at 8:30 o'clock. All members of this organization are requested to be present.

Notice to War Mothers.

All War Mothers are cordially urged to attend the celebration of Independence day at Lakewood, on July 5. All War Mothers are requested to help make this day one of blessing and joy to Atlanta and Fulton county.

MRS. SAM D. JONES, President War Mothers.

Daughters of the Confederacy

MRS. FRANK HARROLD, AMERICUS, PRESIDENT. Mrs. C. Helen Paine, Atlanta, honorary president; Miss Anna C. Benning, Columbus, honorary president; Mrs. W. S. Coleman, Atlanta, first vice president; Mrs. Walter Grace, Macon, second vice president; Mrs. L. G. Youman, Valdosta, third vice president; Mrs. T. E. Ruffin, Dawson, recording secretary; Mrs. S. H. McKee, Americus, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. T. Dixon, Thomasville, registrar; Mrs. W. B. Higginbotham, West Point, treasurer; Miss Mildred Rutherford, Athens, historian; Miss Lillie Martin, Hawkinsville, assistant historian; Mrs. R. A. Grady, Savannah, auditor; Miss Rebecca B. Dupont, recorder of crosses.

MISS MATTIE B. SHEBLEY, ROME, STATE EDITOR.

MRS. T. T. STEVENS, Atlanta, Ga., Acting State Editor.

Early Copy Requested

Recently the management of The Constitution has advised the acting editor that all material for the U. D. C. column must be in the office by Monday night. That means—please note—that Miss Shebley must have all material Saturday night, that it may go out from Rome Monday morning.

President's Appointments.

While many of the chapters are enjoying the midsummer siesta enough are still active to keep the state president very busy calling upon them.

Mrs. Harrold's visit to Athens, while for the purpose of attending the commencement exercises of the university in which her son took such a distinguished part, as state president she was the guest of honor of the Athens chapter at a beautiful reception given at her alma mater and made a splendid address.

During the last week of June the chapter memberships of McRae, Buena Vista and Vienna cordially welcomed Mrs. Harrold, whose timely, sincerely patriotic talks greatly impressed them. Mrs. Harrold had accepted every invitation extended her except when, unfortunately, dates conflicted, as was the case with the C. of C. conference in Savannah and Decatur chapter's invitation.

The Barrow chapter, of Cartersville, will have its "home-coming" in July and Mrs. Harrold is on the program for that session, so it would seem there is to be no surcease of duty for the state president from convention to convention.

New Chairmen.

Mrs. Edward G. Warner's efficient service in memorializing the historic spots around Atlanta durof such a directory, has gone right to work and issued a card appealing to every chapter to co-operate with her and furnish her the name of its membership. Not hearing promptly from each chapter, Mrs. Mann is sending out a second card urging a reply that the directory may be compiled before the convention meets in Macon in October. Such active work deserves co-operation on the part of every U. D. C.

An Appreciation.

A marked copy of the excellent description of the reception tendered the state president by the U. D. C. at Lucy Cobb was sent the state editor with the request that she publish two paragraphs to inspire those who read as it did those who heard the speech. Mrs. Harrold said, in part:

"Under my administration as state president of Georgia division, U. D. C. I have based my work on a five-pointed star of service—membership, care of Confederate veterans, relief of Confederate women, education, world war records. We now have 123 chapters in Georgia with a membership of 12,000.

"To be a member of the Daughters of the Confederacy is the most eloquent tribute a woman can pay her Confederate ancestry and is a vindication of Confederate history before all the world. When the question is asked, 'Is there still a Dixie?' let the answer be, 'Look at the vast throng of Daughters of the Confederacy and doubt it if you dare. With this beautiful peroration, Mrs. Harrold closed her inspiring speech."

"In making good Americans, I believe women have a greater part than men, and their watchword should be 'Preparedness in the Making.' Let the ends thou alimest at be thy country's, thy God's and truth's. Let me ask you to keep the sacred holiness of work ever before you, remembering always, that we are a sisterhood of earnest women striving to fulfill God's teaching in honoring our fathers and remembering also that 'Poor is the country that boasts no heroes, but regarded is that people who, having them, forget.'"

The Haverty Border and Name-Plate

(An Editorial)

Whenever and wherever you see an advertisement surrounded by a border composed of a series of black-and-white checks such as surrounds this editorial, and with a signature in the form of a name-plate as appears below, you may place the utmost confidence in every statement contained in that advertisement.

This store has spent an enormous sum of money in an effort to familiarize the public with this border and name-plate because it stands for something.

They are the symbols we have adopted as a guarantee to the public of truthfulness in advertising and honesty in merchandising.

They tell you silently but surely that only one price, and that price in plain figures, prevails on a piece of furniture.

They assure you that the profit placed on each piece is a legitimate margin, above cost and expense of handling.

They tell you that every illustration in the advertisement is an exact drawing of the actual article advertised.

They represent a store where you will always find a warm welcome, whether you make a purchase or not.

They tell you that you are privileged to buy beautiful furniture for your home on exceptionally easy terms with not one penny extra charge for deferred payments.

They tell you, also, that your cash on a purchase has an actual value that we appreciate, and for the use of which we are willing to pay you ten per cent.

They tell you that we hold as our warmest friends those who have been our customers for the longest period of time.

They tell you that wherever you live in the Southern States you are one of Haverty's neighbors, and will be gladly served by a Haverty Store.

They tell you that we are just as anxious to serve our out-of-town friends as we are those who live in our midst, and that price to them is exactly the same in every instance.

They tell you that we never conduct a discount sale, but confine ourselves to two annual clearance sales, already well known to the public as Red Tag Clearance Sales. One is held January 15-February 28 and the other July 15-August 31.

Finally, Haverty's border and name-plate is your guarantee, of absolute satisfaction, both as to quality of goods and the price that is charged.

May we ask that you consider these facts whenever you see a Haverty advertisement or whenever you wish to order piece of furniture by mail?

Thank you

To Save the American Eagle

Why a New Patriotic Crusade Is Being Urged on Behalf of Our National Bird, Slaughtered by Thousands During the Past Three Years and Now Declared to Have Been Unfairly Condemned to Suffer Extermination

THE Fourth of July orator who, in the past, fairly "made the eagle scream," has an opportunity today to help in rescuing that self-same American bird from extermination at the hands of bounty hunters.

More than eight thousand eagles have been slaughtered along the coastal region and river valleys of Alaska since the Alaskan bounty law went into operation on April 30, 1917. The law provides for the payment of 50 cents for each bald or "American" eagle killed.

In order to swell their gains, it is declared, bounty seekers are no longer limiting themselves to Alaskan territory, but are reaching out into the British provinces adjoining Alaska in search of the rapidly disappearing eagle. It is even possible that by this time more than one-half—perhaps more than three-quarters—of the entire species have been sacrificed and that within the next year or so there will be very few American eagles remaining alive with the exception of the scattered few to be seen, caged for life like malefactors, in the zoological parks.

The bald eagle never has been an abundant species. Estimates of its numbers are said to have been greatly exaggerated. It is only on the basis of the occupied nests that its real numbers can be arrived at with any reasonable degree of accuracy. Computations based on observations of the birds themselves are most unreliable. For, conspicuous by its size and habits, and by its preference for coast regions and large rivers over remote forests and mountains, the eagle is apt to attract considerable attention and the same bird is doubtless seen again and again by various observers in different localities. This will be realized in consideration of the bird's natural longevity and strong powers of flight which make it possible for a single bird to be seen repeatedly over a long period of years and in widely separated places.

Up to the year 1917 the only territory where the bald eagle thrived was along the coastal region and large river valleys of Alaska. Here the American eagle built its nest and multiplied exceedingly for a bird of its size.

Advocates of the Alaskan bounty law declared that the American eagle was destructive and that its numbers must be kept down. The war of extermination followed and has been kept up ever since.

"In view of all that is known by naturalists of the habits of this inoffensive bird," says a bulletin issued by the American Museum of Natural History in New York city, "the hostility to the eagle in Alaska is based rather on misinformation and ignorant prejudice than on any real damage done by the birds. The tales of its ferocity and destructiveness to game or domestic animals are for the greater part pure fiction; for the rest, usually gross exaggerations. Moreover, it is the demonstrated policy of the United States department of agriculture—wise from experience—to discountenance bounty laws for the extermination of birds of prey. Much money is spent each year in the control of harmful rodents whose increase is favored by the destruction of such birds. For the 'American' eagle there is the added plea of its patriotic significance. And finally, as it is a migratory bird, the right to destroy it cannot be claimed by any state or territory. Like most of our other migratory birds, it should be protected by the federal government—particularly as the effect of the protective laws adopted for its preservation in most of our states is being annulled by the action of a single territory.

"The general indifference to the fate of the great bird of splendid tradition is due, beyond doubt, to the common lack of information regarding its threatened extinction. The situation calls for publicity of the widest. The sheer vandalism of the destruction of the bird should be checked, and checked at once. The crusade for its protection should enlist the enthusiasm and sincere effort of bird lovers and bird students throughout the country, of our scientific and patriotic societies and of the public press. It is only by the prompt passage of a federal law protecting the American eagle that our national bird can be saved from total extinction."

GAGE'S OFFICE MACKINTOSH

By ELIZABETH JORDAN

Concerning a Young Man Who Made the Mistake of Hiding His Light Under a Bushel.

It was Henry Haskins, better known to the employees of Haskins & Thorne as "the boss," who uttered the verdict. He uttered it so distinctly that G. Montgomery Gage, looking up some records in the file room, heard every word through the thin partition between this quiet retreat and Haskins' private office.

The bending figure of G. Montgomery Gage stood upright with a jerk. He was no eavesdropper. Indeed, he had a rather nice sense of honor. But the words he had caught included his own name; and they were so few and so warmly delivered that his mind had registered each of them before his ethical sense awakened. He had caught first, almost without realizing it and certainly without interest, a sentence from the lips of Bradley, the office manager, uttered in the gentle, persuasive tones Bradley reserved for Haskins alone.

"But what's the matter with him? I think he'd develop into the best possible man for the place."

Haskins ignored Bradley's opinion, as he had a way of doing in Bradley's presence, though he occasionally quoted it afterward; but he answered Bradley's question.

"The matter with G. Montgomery Gage," he irritably announced, "is that he's wholly colorless. The fellow hasn't any personality."

The body of G. Montgomery Gage, twenty feet away in the file room, sank limply into the nearest chair. So that was what "the boss" thought of him! The fact that even yet he had not taken in the full force of the criticism did not prevent him from fiercely resenting it. For an instant he gave himself up to a scorching humiliation, shot through with anger. Then the next words of the dialogue fell upon his heat like an autumnal rain.

"But I think—" This was Bradley. "No, you don't. If you were doing anything you'd catch my point. This young Gage—"

Young Gage realized that the time had come to take himself away from their proximity. He rose and dazedly made his way out of the file room and along a corridor to a remote little office assigned to Waley, a salesman he knew now was out of town. He hoped he might find this office empty. His own desk was in the firm's crowded counting room, back to back with Bradley's. It was augustly fenced off by a low mahogany railing, but the office boys stepped over this with careless abandon, and associates cheerfully addressed both men across it. The spot did not offer that privacy Gage's suffering soul now demanded.

Waley's little room was empty. With an ejaculation of relief that was half a groan Gage bolted into it, locked the door, and, sitting down before its undisturbed desk, rested his elbows on the cluttered top, took his head between his hands, and called upon his will to steady his reeling faculties.

His will, which was a fairly well trained one, presently obeyed. Slowly the situation grew clear in his mind. In his first daze he had actually imagined himself "in for the blue envelope"—though, considering his excellent record, it seemed incredible that he should be discharged. It was incredible, he reasoned with reviving poise. Why, he was Bradley's right hand man. Only last week Bradley had told him so and had buoyantly hinted at something pleasant to be discussed later.

Gage knew what that something pleasant was. It was the possible promotion of G. Montgomery Gage to the job of city salesman, made vacant by the untimely death of Bob Walton, who had successfully filled it for three years. Gage's mind, quite clear now, worked with gratifying alertness. It grasped the crux of the situation, which was very simple. Bradley had suggested him for the vacant post and Haskins had turned him down.

The rest was not so easy to follow, but with a new look in his steady eyes and a jaw line suddenly tightened young Gage set himself to the task of getting at the bottom of it. He had been turned down because Haskins did not approve of him—because Haskins considered him "colorless," whatever the deuce that meant, and lacking in "personality."

The charge of colorlessness left G. Montgomery Gage flat. He was at sea as to just what it meant and how to remedy it. The matter of personality was clearer. He understood it in a general way, but this was no time for generalities. He must get down to rock bottom. To the subconscious mind of G. Montgomery Gage a man with "personality" was the loud, hearty, breezy, self-assertive, rather vulgar sort—in short, the type he himself abysmally disliked and had gone to extremes to avoid becoming. Now he had discovered that the boss liked that type—or did he? He, Haskins, was loud and self-assertive, but he was neither breezy nor hearty. Instead he seemed the willing victim of a perpetual grouch. Also he remembered that Haskins openly disliked a fat employee named Walker, who represented breeness and heartiness in their fullest flowering. Walker was a valuable man, but Haskins had no personal intercourse with him, and every one except Walker knew why. So perhaps Haskins didn't like breeness and heartiness after all.

And what was "personality," anyway? To Gage, in this serious hour, its meaning was less clear than ever before. It was merely a word and a hazy impression. He decided to learn its exact meaning. Returning to the counting room with brisk steps, he dropped into his desk chair and the next moment was turning the leaves of a dictionary with fingers that still felt slightly unsteady.

Here it was. His eyes ran past the meaningless lines with which Mr. Webster sought to evade giving a direct reply to the eager seeker for knowledge: "Personality: quality or state of being personal, or of being a person." Hump! Much good that sort of definition did a chap! "Personal existence or identity." No one could say he didn't exist, anyway. "That which constitutes distinction of person"—perhaps he was getting at it now. "Individuality; as, a striking personality."

The muscles in the back of Gage's neck began to ache. Also his ire rose. He was getting nowhere. "Striking personality." Just how much did that mean? Or did it mean very much, anyway? He decided that it didn't, and his spirits sank still further over the next definition. "A personal being; a person." If old Haskins thought he, G. Montgomery, wasn't a person—his breath caught sharply. Here it was. He had been right after all: "Quality of relating to a particular person, especially disparagingly or hostilely." Ah, ha! He was getting at it now. There was no question that in discussing him Haskins had been both "disparaging" and "hostile." And, yes, here was the rest of it: "as, vulgar personality."

Young Gage closed the dictionary with a deep sigh. He decided that his hazy impression had been correct, but the reflection brought him no comfort. It was impossible to settle down to work. As a cover for his continued abstraction he seized a pad and pencil, wrote down some figures, and apparently pored over them absently. It was not his habit to do this sort of thing. He could not remember ever having done it before. But he had had an awful jolt—that was the cold truth of it. How the deuce could a fellow get to work right after hearing the boss say he was colorless and lacked personality?

The hand of G. Montgomery Gage crept toward the dictionary and found the word "colorless." Perhaps that would help him with some example of his application to human beings. With absorbed interest his gray eyes followed the brief definition: "Colorless; without color."

Under his breath, but with deep feeling, G. Montgomery Gage uttered a rude word. A lot of help that sort of thing gave a man. Well, he'd see what color was. His brain reeled as he wrestled mentally with the information Mr. Webster handed out to him: "A property of visible phenomena. . . . Strictly excluding black and white. . . . a pigment. . . . a national flag, ensign. . . . outward semblance, especially such as hides the real character. . . ."

Young Gage groaned and hurriedly turned the groan into a cough. Did the boss want him to hide his real character? "Tone scheme or harmony of color in a painting; the free use of words." . . . Gage breathed a little better. He was using words very freely by this time, though with the caution necessitated by his environment. Perhaps, after all, there was more color in him than he had realized. But the final definition sent him to the mat: "Acoustics; timbre; clang."

He sighed again, closed the dictionary with a gesture of finality, and, sitting back in his chair, looked around the big counting room. Was there any one there who could help him—any one, to put it briefly, who knew more than the dictionary? Certainly there was more in the words of the boss than Mr. Webster had given him. His eyes fell on Bradley, whose usually smooth brow was knit into an intricate pattern of cross stitching as he bent over his work. Clearly Bradley was annoyed. Gage wondered if Bradley had known what the boss meant. Probably not, but he had undoubtedly beaten Gage to the decision that lay couled in their meaning—Haskins' decision that Gage was not up to the new job because he lacked "color" and "personality."

G. Montgomery's roving eyes fell on a smooth, brown head bent over a desk across the room. Resting there, they brightened. Hope Strong was a mighty intelligent girl. She was confidential secretary to young Thorne, the junior member of the firm. It was believed in the office that she did all Thorne's work and most of his thinking—young Thorne himself being addicted to golf. It was rumored that she read much and that, as she belonged to a prominent but financially reduced family, she moved in superior social circles. Gage rose, crossed the room to Miss Strong's desk, and, helping himself to a chair, dropped into it with an effect of decision.

"Can you spare a moment?" he asked rather formally. He was always a trifle formal. Miss Strong, who was rarely formal, nodded absently. She was just signing a letter with the firm's name and her own initials and she finished her task and added the letter to a waiting pile at her right before she spoke. Then she faced the newcomer with a smile.

"Miss Strong," began Gage. "I'm going to ask you a question that's a little outside the usual run of business."

"Yes," Miss Strong was not especially interested.

"If you heard that a man was colorless and without personality what impression of him would that convey to your mind—if you knew it didn't apply to his work?" he asked hastily.

The girl did not reply at once. The question was unexpected and she gave her mind to it. As she reflected she looked at the quiet, well dressed, steady eyed, smooth faced young man before her. Under her gaze he flushed very slightly, but she did not need that signal of distress to read his secret. She knew exactly what man had been described as "colorless and without personality." She decided to help G. Montgomery Gage if she could.

"Why," she said at last, "I think I should get the impression that he was just an average man—that there was nothing about him unusual or arresting—that he wasn't the kind to make me notice him or think of him in one way or another."

"Oh? For a moment young Gage digested this in silence.

"Is that against a fellow?" he asked at last. "To give one that impression, I mean, if he is admittedly doing his job up to the notch?"

"Why, no one wants to seem ordinary, you know," Hope suggested. "I suppose that's what it amounts to—that the man without color or personality seems an ordinary, everyday, uninteresting, untemperamental chap. Of course, he may not be," she added, rather underlining the words. "He may just convey that impression to certain minds. Underneath he may be very unusual, you see—very clever and all that sort of thing; but—well, I suppose we can say he doesn't carry his stock in his show windows."

Hope was afraid she was not helping the young man much. She was also suddenly conscious of a surprising desire to help him—a desire caused by a look in his steady eyes which she had never seen there before. Now these eyes brightened suddenly.

"Then a man with a personality is one who does carry his stock in the show window, isn't he?" he asked eagerly. "He's the assertive, pushing, cocksure type, isn't he? That's what I've always thought."

"No, indeed; not necessarily that at all," Hope was getting interested. "A man of that kind certainly has color and personality—but it's the unpleasant sort. One sees it, feels it, but one doesn't admire it."

"Isn't it always unpleasant?" Gage's mind was returning to Mr. Webster.

"Good gracious, no. Why, a man may have a charming personality. He may be like—like—well, like Bob Walton. You know how altogether delightful Bob was. He had a very strong personality and everything about it was manly and fine."

With this obvious illustration of her point in mind Hope began to see her way clear. And Gage, recalling Haskins' words and Walton's job, experienced an illumination.

"If a stranger came into this office," continued Hope, warming to her subject, "and met twenty men, including Bob Walton, which man do you think he'd like best and remember longest?"

Gage nodded.

"Walton, of course."

"Of course. And why? Bob wasn't as clever as lots of men. He wasn't as clever as you are," she added so simply that the words seemed commonplace, "or at least he wasn't as quick and efficient. He wasn't at all good looking either, bless him! But he had a delicious sense of humor, the most contagious laugh in the world, and a big, understanding, sympathetic heart. In other words, he had an unusually lovable personality."

"I see," Young Gage was with her now, following each point she made, leaping ahead to illustrations of his own. "But where did his color come in?"

Hope laughed.

"Color? Well, 'color' is a little hard to define. The person who is always the same might be said to have one color. It may be a strong color—an exuberant, flashy red such as some vulgar person suggests, or a nice, dependable gray such as you suggest."

"Every word was a friendly little poultice on Gage's sore heart. "Bob was a kaleidoscope," she went on cheerfully. "His color was changing all the time. Sometimes he was blue," she joked, "notwithstanding his sunny nature; you know how strong his reactions were. Often he was the most sunny gold. O," she broke off, "I'm getting beyond my depth—but see what I mean."

"Yes," G. Montgomery Gage stood up. He felt as if she had opened the windows of his soul and sent in a spring breeze. His bad quarter of an hour was over. He knew, too, that he was under very real obligations to this quiet, brown eyed, brown haired girl with whom heretofore his intercourse had been so purely formal and businesslike. He smiled at her and the smile was like an illumination from within. It so transformed his dark, rather serious young face that the well poised Miss Strong almost thrilled under it.

"I'm going to tell you something," he began. And because he felt suddenly shy he was suddenly very boyish. "You've helped me a lot—much more than you realize. You see—" he hesitated, then brought out his confession—"I'm the chap that some one said was without color and personality."

"I knew that," Hope spoke so casually that his self-consciousness disappeared.

"You did?" his voice flattened. "But of course you did. You recognized the description."

"No." She shook her dark head at him. The little gesture was so intimate that he had a momentary sense of being alone in the world with her. "I merely realized that you might give that impression to others."

G. Montgomery looked straight down into her brown eyes. What he saw there, though it was merely a golden friendliness, made him feel slightly dizzy. This was his first experience in the greatest talking game in the world—the universal "You are—am I" interchange of interested young humans. With sudden resolution he sat down again.

"Not to you?" he asked quietly. "No—not to me."

"Why not?"

If Hope had been a self-analyst she might have paused at this moment long enough to realize that as a matter of fact she had given rather less thought to Bradley's young assistant than she was leading him to suppose. She had admired him in an impersonal way, had respected his ability, had enjoyed the few brief and matter of fact encounters each working day had brought to them. But strangely, in this moment, it seemed to her that they had known each other very well and for a long time, and that now suddenly she was seeing a new and stirring phase of an intimately familiar personality. The sensation made her self-conscious. So did the new, arrested look of Gage's steady eyes. She began to flounder a little.

"No, I—I—why, it's always hard to put these things into words. But I had an idea that you really had an unusually vivid personality and that you were—well, wearing a business mackintosh over it."

G. Montgomery Gage drew a deep breath. It was a great moment in life. At last, in a lonely world, he had found the one who understood him and who had discovered his carefully guarded secret.

"That's exactly what I've been doing," he confessed. "I've been modeling myself on a man I admired in my home town—the quiet, reserved, self-contained type. It seemed to me that he had just the right business manner—I've been imitating it for two years and hiding my real self—and now," he finished bitterly, "look at me!"

Hope's low laugh was like the gurgle of a hidden brook.

"Who is it that has found you lacking in color and personality?" she asked lightly. "Or may one ask?"

"One may, if you're the one." The youth in front of her was changing into another man before her eyes. The office mackintosh was opened, was thrown back. "It was Haskins."

"Oh Mr. Haskins—" Haskins, if he had heard those simple words, would have been pained by the modulations of Hope's voice. He admired and respected Miss Strong.

"But it's important," explained Gage, looking at her with that new expression in his steady eyes. "It's a question . . ." he hesitated, then plunged ahead. One didn't make half-way confidences to a girl like this. "It's a question of promotion. He thinks I'm not up to specifications in color and personality."

She nodded. "You've been playing the rôle of a man twenty years older than you are." The young man sobered. "And the time has come to drop it?"

"No," she said positively. "Don't drop it. Vary it. Keep it, but let your own personality show through it. For instance," she put her head on one side and glanced at him mischievously, "smile oftener. You do it so well!"

Both young things laughed outright. At the sound every head near them turned in their direction as if moved by a common spring. Neither observed the phenomenon. Gage rose again.

"I'll never forget this," he said. "Whether I reach the job or not, you've put me on the right track for future sprinting, and I know it."

She stopped him as he was turning away. "There's one thing more," she said. "I know from observation that you're a very fast worker. But—" she hesitated—"you work so quietly and with so little fuss that underestimating persons—"

"Such as the boss?"

"Such as the boss," she agreed coolly, "might think you were—well, almost slow." That took him on the raw and she saw it. But she had heard him criticized as deliberate, and unconsciously she was now supplying him with Haskins' final criticism, which he had left the file room without hearing.

"The fellow's work's all right, I suppose, if you say so—this grudgingly, to Bradley—but he doesn't put any snap or pep into it!" Still looking at him with the golden friendliness that was so soothing, she wiped out the memory of the tacit criticism with her next words:

"The next time you do a great big job in a few minutes make a little fuss about it. Let them see your wheels go round. Not often, of course, but just often enough to make them realize what is happening."

Gage nodded. "I get you. It's what I've always wanted to do. My impulse has been to cackle like a hen! You'll hear me doing it some day!"

He went back to his desk and plunged into his work with characteristic absorption. Further problems connected with his personality and color could wait until after business hours, and they did.

Until late that night, however, C. Montgomery Gage sat in a haze of tobacco smoke in the small living room of his bachelor apartment and made an inventory of himself as he was and might be. Thanks to the momentum supplied by Hope Strong, he had soon arrived at conclusions that were few but definite.

Obviously he had overdone the stern captain of industry attitude which he had so admired in his model. The model could carry it, being older and having, as it were, "arrived." On Gage it had settled like steel armor, stiffening him into what might easily have seemed confirmed gruffness. The thing to do, of course, was to follow Miss Strong's advice—keep enough of the old attitude to retain confidence in his stability, and loosen some of the youthful enthusiasm he had held so sternly in leash. By temperament he was overoptimistic, and he knew it. It would be a pretty job, well worth putting over, to merge those two personalities into one as steady and reliable as Gage had been, yet as human and—no, not so likeable as Bab—he could never be that, he admitted—but as approachable and as companionable as Bob. Perhaps he could put that much over. And that effect, he knew now, would incidentally supply the color for which the boss seemed yearning.

At this point Gage should have concentrated on Haskins and the new job, but he did nothing of the kind. He concentrated on Hope Strong, recalling all she had said and all he had said, wishing he had said more and better things, planning future talks in which he could say better things. Without realizing why he was in a state of extraordinary mental and physical well being. He could not remember having felt since boyhood such a vivid sense of being joyously alive. Perhaps it was the jolt he had received, or the talk with Hope, or both. One thing was certain, he'd give those fellows in the office so much color and personality from now on that they'd think they were watching a rainbow.

During the next few days the members of the office staff of Haskins & Thorne were privileged to observe a surprising transformation in the personality of the quiet and reserved young man they had known as G. Montgomery Gage. For one thing, he had become George Gage.

"Great!" applauded Bradley when his assistant asked to have the name changed in the office records. "I hate these initialed double barreled names. Suits you better, too. Why didn't you do it long ago?"

"No time to think of it," George Gage affably explained. "You've kept me too darned busy."

Bradley looked at him with sudden interest. "What's happened to you lately?" he demanded. "Fallen in love?"

George sighed. "A fat chance I'd have if I did," he reminded his chief. "You've kept me here every evening this week. When I fall in love I'll ask for a vacation."

"You'll get it," promised Bradley. He had got into a way of watching his young assistant with a puzzled expression. The general office theory that the change in Gage's man-

Facts From Georgia's Vital Statistics

In Number of Plural Births.
One Death in Every Six That of Infant

By T. E. Conner.

That Georgia leads all the states in percentage of plural births, twins, triplets and quadruplets; that the birth rate among negroes is considerably lower than it is among whites; that of the negro births in this state, at least, one in eight is illegitimate; that one death out of every six is of a baby under its first year and that nearly one-third of our population succumbs before the tenth year of life—these with other interesting data are contained in the vital statistics report of the state board of health for the first three months of the current year.

The report which was compiled by Dr. W. A. Davis, state statistician, from the birth and death certificates furnished his office in accordance with the vital statistics law. He records that the death certificates have almost reached ninety per cent of the total required for recognition by the federal government, while the registration of births still leaves much to be desired, approximating only about 75 per cent.

During the months of January, February and March, 15,917 birth certificates were filed, omitting 45 certificates which were incomplete as to race and sex. Of this number 10,920, or 68.37 per cent, were of white children; 4,942, or 31.19 per cent were of negroes. It follows that either many negro births are not being registered, or that the birth rate among the negroes is much lower than among the whites. If the birth rate for both races were nearly the same, there should have been 8,790 negro births recorded, as the white and black populations are in the ratio of 45 blacks to 55 whites. As it is evident that more than 55 per cent of negro births are being registered, he concludes that the negro birth rate is considerably lower than that of the whites.

SEXES ARE NEARLY BALANCED.

Of the 15,372 births recorded, 50.3 per cent were males, and 49.7 per cent females. There were 102 more white boys than white girls registered and only six more negro boys than negro girls.

These births included one set of white quadruplets, six sets of triplets evenly divided between the races; and 242 pairs of twins, 153 white and 89 black. This record places Georgia in the lead of all the states in plural births. The United States registration area shows only one set of triplets for 9,273 births, while Georgia reports one set for each 2,552 births and throws in the quadruplets for good measure. Georgia has a plural birth rate of 15.6 per thousand. Virginia comes next with 14.7 and North Carolina is third with 14.1. The plural rate of New Hampshire is only 8.9; that of Kentucky, 9.3; of New York, 9.9. And Georgia's count does not include triplets and quadruplets.

In fact, the report covering 1,383,649

births in the registration area of the United States last year did not include a single set of quadruplets.

Georgia reported two sets during the year 1919, when birth registration was not half as complete as now; and one set for the first three months of this year. The rates per 10,000 were as follows: United States registration area (which does not yet include Georgia), twins 112, triplets 1; Georgia, twins 152, triplets 3.

Of the Georgia births reported during the months above named, 4.7 per cent were of illegitimate children; 129 white, 623 negroes; 394 males, 358 females. Of these illegittimates, 37.1 per cent were whites and 82.7 per cent negroes. The rate for whites was 11.8 per thousand births; and for negroes, 125 per thousand. Low as this shows the state of morality existing among Georgia negroes, it is not nearly so bad as that shown by the rate in other sections. In Maryland there were 170 illegittimates in 1,000 negro births; and in Vermont, the rate was 285 per thousand.

Including under the head of infant mortality, all deaths of children under two years old, there were 1,974 deaths reported, giving an infant mortality rate of 124 per 1,000 births for the first quarter of 1920. There was one death to every eight births, but the rate was more than twice as great among the negroes, one child dying to each five born, whereas, among the whites, one child died to each ten births. Of the still born, 374 were whites; 341 negroes.

During the first three months of the year, 10,911 death certificates were filed, showing a death rate of 14.4 per 1,000 population. This includes 730 still births, 280 deaths due to premature birth, and 191 deaths ascribed to old age. With still births excluded, the rate is 13.5 per thousand, accepting 2,975,000 as the population of the state. There were 5,934 deaths among the whites; 4,938 among the negroes; 5,444 were males and 5,429 females. Thirty-six records did not show the sex or race. The percentage of deaths was 54.9 white; 45.1 negroes. This is about the numerical ratio that the races stand to each other in the total population. There were 50.02 per cent of the deaths of males; and 49.98 per cent of females.

2,156 DEATHS
CAUSED BY FLU.

Influenza, the epidemic of which reached its peak in February, caused 2,156 deaths; 1,296 white, 867 negroes. During January only 68 deaths from influenza were reported, but February brought in 1,099 and March 992. The disease caused three deaths among the whites to two among the negroes. There were 10 deaths of males to 12 of females, the fatality being especially great among expectant mothers.

Pneumonia in one or other of its forms carried away 1,405 people in Georgia during the three months. January showed 473, February and March 380 each, the average being 468, or 188 per 100,000 of population for the three months. It was equally fatal to both races, the report showing 733 whites and 672 negroes, with 722 males and 683 females. Tuberculosis caused 659 deaths. Of these, 61 per cent were among the negroes with two female deaths to one male, while the ratio among whites was 14 females to 11 males. Of the total deaths the percentage due to tuberculosis was 2 per cent less than in 1919, being 6.56 per cent, but this difference is probably explained by the fact that many records gave influenza as the cause with tuberculosis as a secondary cause, and were attributed to influenza.

Forty-two per cent of all the deaths reported were attributed to influenza, pneumonia and tuberculosis. These are all diseases of the respiratory tract and are spread from one person to another. An attack of influenza leads to pneumonia, Dr. Davis points out, and both pneumonia and influenza render their victim susceptible to tuberculosis. They are so closely allied as to be considered one question in the prevention of disease.

Bright's disease was given as the cause of death on 466 certificates, organic heart disease on 385; apoplexy on 352. There is a close relation between organic heart disease and Bright's disease as diagnosed by the ordinary physician, apoplexy is frequently applied to a death not thoroughly understood. These three diseases accounted for 11.9 per cent of the total deaths.

There were 274 deaths from cancer; 175 white, 105 negro. Two white women to one man succumbed to cancer and four negro women to one man.

573 DEATHS DUE TO EXTERNAL CAUSES.

There were 27 suicides, 82 homicides and 464 accidental deaths, making a total of 573 deaths due to external causes. Five persons were killed by lightning, 21 drowned, 33 killed by railroads, 146 persons burned to death and 54 killed by accidental discharge of fire arms. There were four white women, 15 white men, 17 negro women and 46 negro men murdered. Of these homicides 75.6 per cent were committed with fire arms. If to this number be added the 54 accidental deaths and the 10 suicidal deaths due to fire arms, it would give a total of 146 deaths, or 25 per cent of all those due to external causes during the three months.

While diarrhoea among children should not run high during the winter months, there were 125 deaths of children under two years old and 83 of those above that age ascribed to this cause.

The average age at death was 38.1 years, but, if deaths of those under two years of age be excluded, the average will be raised to 44.8 years. The records show 21 persons living to 100 years; 18 negroes and three whites. Since there are no birth records by which these unusual ages can be verified, however, not much credence can be placed in them. Between 90 and 100 there were 77 deaths, 31 whites and 46 negroes.

The percentage of deaths at any age period in the negro is found to vary from the same age period in the white. During the first few years of life, the negro death rate is considerably in excess of the white, but fever, diphtheria, measles, malaria and at the tenth year they are about even. From the tenth year on up to the 70th, deaths, or 2.6 per cent of the total.

2,156 Deaths
Caused by Flu
Epidemic in Georgia—573
Deaths From External
Causes in 3 Months

however, the negro again dies out more rapidly than the white. At 20 the ratio is 30 to 33; at 40, 51 to 61; at 50, 60 to 73. Negroes who have survived their 70th year seem to have a better chance of life than the whites of equal age.

Georgia's death rate for these three months shows that more than one death in six occurred during the first year of life. A still higher infant mortality must be expected during the summer.

"Minor causes receive most attention in the prevention of death and disease," Dr. Davis notes. The record of approximately 10,000 deaths shows 78 from whooping cough, 70 from diphtheria and croup, 65 from typhoid fever, 20 from malaria, 18 from measles and 12 from scarlet fever. Of course, typhoid and malaria are not winter diseases and a heavier death rate from them may be expected during the summer. It is a notable fact, however, that whooping cough, scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, malaria and typhoid fever produced only 263 deaths, or 2.6 per cent of the total.

THE VICTORY AT SEA

By Admiral William Sowden Sims

In March, 1918, it became apparent that the German submarine campaign had failed. They respect that faced the Allied forces at that time, when compared with the conditions which had faced them in April, 1917, forms one of the most impressive contrasts in history. In the first part of the earlier year the cause of the Allied powers, and consequently the cause of liberty throughout the world, had reached the point almost of desperation. On both land and sea the Germans seemed to hold the future in their hands. In Europe the armies of the central powers were everywhere in the ascendant. The French and British were holding their own in France, and in the Somme campaign they had apparently inflicted great damage upon the German forces, yet the disintegration of the Russian army, the unmistakable signs of which had already appeared, was bringing nearer the day when they would have to meet the undivided strength of their enemy. At the time in question, Rumania, Serbia, and Montenegro were conquered countries, Italy seemed unable to make any progress against the Austrians, Bulgaria and Turkey had become practically German provinces, and the dream of a great Germanic western empire was rapidly approaching realization. So strong was Germany in a military sense, so little did she apprehend that the United States could ever assemble her resources and her men in time to make them a decisive element in the struggle, that the German war lords, in their effort to bring the European conflict to a quick conclusion, did not hesitate to take the step which was destined to make our country their enemy.

Germans Were Confident.
Probably no nation ever adopted a war measure with more confidence in its success. The results which the German submarines could accomplish seemed at that time to be simply a matter of mathematical calculation. The Germans figured that they could sink at least 1,000,000 tons a month, completely off Great Britain's supplies of food and war materials, and thus end the war by October or November of 1918. Even though the United States should declare war, what could an unprepared nation like our own accomplish in such a brief period? Millions of troops we might indeed raise, but we could not train them in three or four months, and even though we could perform such a miracle, it was ridiculous to suppose that we could transport them to Europe through the submarine danger zone.

I have already shown that the Germans were not alone in this predicting the course of events. In the month of April, 1917, I had found the British officials just about as distressed as the Germans were jubilant. Already the latter, in sinking merchant ships, had had success which almost equalled their own predictions; no adequate means of defense against the submarine had been devised; and the chiefs of the British navy made no attempt to disguise their apprehension for the future.

Such was the atmosphere of gloom which prevailed in allied councils in April, 1917; yet one year later the naval situation had completely changed. The reasons for that change have been set forth in the preceding pages. In that brief twelve months the relative position of the submarine had undergone a marked transformation. Instead of being usually the pursuer it was now often the pursued. Instead of sailing jauntily upon the high seas, sinking helpless merchantmen almost at will, it was halfheartedly lying in wait along the coasts, seeking its victims in the vessels of dispersed convoys. If it attempted to push out to sea and attack a convoy, escorting destroyers were likely to deliver one of their dangerous attacks; if it sought the shallow coastal waters, a fleet of yachts, sloops, and subchasers, were constantly ready to assail it with dozens of depth charges. An attempt to cross the Strait of Dover meant almost inevitable destruction by mines; an attempt to escape into the ocean by the northern passage involved the momentary dread of a similar end or the hazard of passing through the difficult Pentland Firth. In most of the narrow passages allied submarines lay constantly in wait for their torpedoes; a great fleet of airplanes and dirigibles was always circling above ready to rain a shower of bombs upon the underwater foe. Already the ocean floor about the British Isles held not far from 200 sunken submarines, with most of their crews, amounting to at least 4,000 men, whose deaths involved perhaps the most hideous tragedies of the war.

Bad as was this situation, it was nothing compared with what it would become a few months or a year hence. American and British shipyards were turning out anti-submarine craft with great rapidity; the industries of America with their enormous output of steel, had been enlisted in the anti-submarine campaign. The American and British shipbuilding facilities were neutralizing the German campaign in two ways; they were not only constructing war vessels on a scale which would soon drive all the German submarines from the sea, but they were building merchant tonnage so rapidly that, in March 1918, more new tonnage was launched than was being destroyed. Thus by this time the Teutonic hopes of ending the war by the submarine had utterly collapsed; if the Germans were to win the war at all, or even to obtain a peace which would not be disastrous, some other program must be adopted quickly.

Germany Turns Again to the Land. Disheartened by their failure at sea, the enemy therefore turned their eyes once more toward the land. The destruction of Russian military power had given the German armies a great numerical superiority over those of the allies. There seemed little likelihood that the French or the British, after three years of frightfully grueling war, could add materially to their forces. Thus, with the group of the powers such as existed in the German mind, a tremendous advantage on their side, for Russia, which German statesmen for fifty years had feared as a source of inexhaustible man-supply to her enemies, had disappeared as a military power. But a new element in the situation now counterbalanced this temporary gain; that was the daily increasing importance of the United States in the war.

The Germans, who in 1917 had despised us as an enemy, immediately prospective, now despised us no longer. The army, which they declared could never be raised and trained, was actually being raised and trained by the millions. The nation which their publicists had denounced as lacking cohesion and public spirit had adopted conscription simultaneously with their declaration of war, and the people whom the Germans had affected to regard as devoted only to the pursuit of gain and pleasure had manifested a unity of purpose which they had never before displayed, and had offered their lives, their labors, and their wealth without limit to the cause of the allies. Up to March 1918, only a comparatively small part of the American army had reached Europe, but the Germans had already tested its fighting quality and had learned to respect it. Yet all these manifestations would have not disturbed the German calculations except for one depressing fact. Even a nation of 100,000,000 brave and energetic people, fully trained and equipped for war, is not a formidable foe so long as an impassable watery gulf of three thousand miles separates them from the field of battle.

For the greater part of 1917 the German people believed that their submarines could bar the progress of the American armies. By March 1918, they had awakened from this delusion. Not only was an American army, millions strong, in process of formation, but the alarming truth now dawned upon the German mind that they could be transported to Europe.

Yet the situation, desperate as it seemed, held forth one more hope. If the German armies, which still greatly outnumbered the French and British, could strike and win a decisive victory before the Americans could arrive, then they might still force a satisfactory peace. "It is a race between Ludendorff and Wilson," is the terse and accurate way in which Lloyd-George summed up the situation. The great blow fell on March 1, 1918; the British and the French met it with heroism, but it was quite evident that they were fighting against terrible odds. At this time the American army in France numbered about 300,000 men; it now became the business of the American navy, assisted by the British, to transport the American troops who could increase these forces sufficiently to turn the balance in the allies' favor.

The supreme hour for which all the anti-submarine labors of the preceding year were merely preliminary had now arrived. Since the close of the war, there has been much discussion of the part which the American navy played in bringing it to a successful end. Even during the war there was some criticism on this point. There were two more or less definite opinions in the public mind upon this question. One was that the main business of our war vessels was to convoy the American soldiers to France; the other emphasized the anti-submarine warfare as its most important duty. Any one would suppose, from the detached way in which these two subjects have been discussed, that the anti-submarine warfare and the successful transportation of troops were separate matters. An impression apparently prevails that at the beginning of the war, the American navy could have quietly decided whether it would devote its energies to making warfare on the submarine or to convoying American armies; yet the absurdity of such a conception must be apparent to any one who has read the foregoing pages. The several operations in force a satisfactory peace. "It is a race between Ludendorff and Wilson," is the terse and accurate way in which Lloyd-George summed up the situation. The great blow fell on March 1, 1918; the British and the French met it with heroism, but it was quite evident that they were fighting compish this great purpose became automatically our duty. Germany was basing her chances of success upon the submarine; our business was therefore to assist in defeating the submarine. The cause of the allies was our cause; our cause was the cause of the allies; anything which benefited the allies benefited the United States; and anything which benefited the United States benefited the allies. Neither we nor France nor England were conducting a separate campaign, we were separate units of a harmonious whole. At the beginning of the one pressing duty was to put an end to the sinking of merchantmen, not because these merchantmen were for the larger part British, but because the failure to do so would have meant the elimination of Great Britain from the war, with results which would have meant defeat for the other allies.

Our twelve months' campaign against the submarine was an invaluable preliminary to transporting the troops. Does any sane person believe that we could have put two millions of Americans into France had the German submarines maintained, until the spring and summer of 1918, the striking power which had been theirs in the spring of 1917? Merely to state the question is to answer it. In that same twelve months we had gained much experience which was exceedingly valuable when we began transporting troops. The most efficacious protection to merchant shipping, the convoy, was similarly the greatest safeguard to our military transports. Those methods which had been so successfully used in shipping food, munitions, and materials were now used in shipping soldiers.

GAGE'S OFFICE MACKINTOSH

ner and spirits was due to a large increase in salary was not shared by Bradley, who knew better. George kept them all guessing. He was not overdoing his new role. He was very artistic. On the job he was almost as serious and reserved as ever. But among his associates he was rapidly becoming what he had not been up till now, "a good mixer." They had all liked him, but in an unenthusiastic way. He was on the square. Now they sought him out, "jollied" him, and were casually "jollied" by him, and talked about him excessively among themselves.

One day he pleasantly but flatly disagreed with Bradley on a matter of office policy. He had often done this, and Bradley was big enough to take it good humoredly. This day Bradley turned on him with quick decision. "Go and tell the boss that," he ordered. "Get him to decide it."

Gage stared at him. "Great Scott, I don't want to do that," he began. "You know I follow your orders. I merely told you what I think because you've encouraged me to do so."

"That's all right," Bradley's words came crisply. "Now I want to know what Haskins thinks. Go and ask him."

"Why don't you?" Bradley looked straight at him. "Go and ask him," he repeated, and this time he spoke in a tone of curt command.

Gage went rather dazedly. He wasn't at all nervous. He had never been afraid to talk to Haskins. But he was afraid that Bradley was annoyed. Then the solution of the situation flashed upon him. Bradley, good old Bradley, was giving him his chance—his chance to show Haskins his new color and personality! The revelation was alarming. What if the new color and personality didn't come up to the scratch? His heart dropped a beat. Then with set teeth he strode to the door of the private office, knocked once, and entered without waiting for permission.

Haskins, bent over his desk in august isolation, raised his head and granted. Young Gage took the chair beside the boss' desk and plunged at once into the subject of his mission. But even as he spoke he realized that he was reverting to the manner he had always worn with Haskins—a manner self-contained, cool, and, yes, colorless.

"Mr. Haskins," he said, "Mr. Bradley and I differ about that Wetmore matter." Haskins grunted again. Leaning back in his chair, he stared at the caller. Haskins was in an ugly mood, and in such moods it was his pleasant habit to charge at any one who approached him. He charged at Gage now, head down.

"O, you differ, do you?" he asked ironically. "How do you differ?"

"The office mackintosh of which Hope had spoken was well in place again and buttoned tight."

"Well, sir, I think—"

"Guess we'll hear what Bradley thinks first," mumbled Haskins. "We can wait a bit for the rest."

The snub was so unexpected that Gage crimsoned and his spirit rallied. A few buttons burst from the office mackintosh.

"You know exactly what Bradley thinks, sir," he reminded his employer. "He told you yesterday. I was trying to save your time. But if you have forgotten—" he added, with a sudden grin.

The grin was an illuminating one. It was based on the fact that Gage had scored twice and that he knew it. Haskins boasted of the fact that he never forgot anything. The boss saw the grin, but ignored it.

"I inferred that some new development had come up," he snapped. "Otherwise I don't see why I'm bothered with the thing again."

Under his bushy eyebrows he stared with hot eyes at the youngster who had had the impertinence to take a "rise" out of him. That remark would hold him a minute, he thought. But it didn't. Young Gage grinned again.

"A new development has come up," he said cheerfully. "I don't agree with Mr. Bradley's handling of the matter."

"O, you don't!" The boss was now enraged and pawing. "I guess we'll let Bradley settle it," he announced. "What Bradley says here goes," he added. "Is that clear?"

"Yes, sir, it is," Gage was on his feet now. He was mad clear through and he showed it. He reached the door in four long strides. Then, stopping with his hand on the knob, he said conversationally, "I'll say good-by, Mr. Haskins. I'm leaving Saturday."

Haskins took the remark in silence, though it startled him. The boy was valuable to the firm and he knew it. He had not meant the interview to end in such a manner. "That's the first I've heard of it," he snapped as Gage opened the door. "When did you resign?"

"This very minute." Young Gage sent back the reply from the door sill. As he shut the door he was recalled by a bejow from within.

"Come back here!" George went back. He was still very angry and the steady eyes he fixed on his employer betrayed it. His smile had wholly disappeared.

"What does this nonsense mean? Are you ass enough to think that you know more than Bradley?"

Haskins was sparring for time. In his heart he was afraid. Bradley would be furious, and Bradley was one of the few indispensable men he had. Also, he now realized, he himself had not shown up very well in the little engagement just ended. Gage was speaking.

"It means just this, Mr. Haskins," he said formally. "I don't think I know better than Mr. Bradley, but he has always been kind enough to listen to me on the few occasions when we have differed."

He did not add, as he might have done, that very often Bradley had come round to his, Gage's, point of view and had been glad of it, as he would probably do in the present instance. Bradley, he knew, would not have sent him to Haskins unless Gage had a good case.

"Today Mr. Bradley himself sent me to you," he ended. Haskins thought he saw an outlet.

"Why the devil didn't you tell me that in the beginning?" he demanded.

Gage's nerves snapped. Tearing off his office mackintosh, he hurled it at his employer's feet. The week had been a hard one and this episode was the climax.

"Why the devil didn't you know it," he retorted fiercely. "Do you think I'm the kind of bound that would come sneaking in to you behind Bradley's back?"

Haskins wheeled in his chair and stared at him.

"I don't know anything about the kind you are," he snapped, but his voice and manner had undergone a change.

"Then it's high time I resigned. Good day, sir." Gage was again on his way to the door.

"Hold on a minute," Haskins had done some quick thinking in the last minute and a half. Now he made one of the snap-shot decisions for which he was famous.

"I was wrong, my boy," he said, frankly. "I haven't a leg to stand on. You must stay it to the—O well, to the best or something."

The austere features of George Gage relaxed. Almost unwillingly he grinned.

"If that's an apology, sir," he said, "I accept it—and we'll consider the incident closed."

"No, we won't. There's something else."

Haskins was interested in this fellow who had beaten him at every point of the little verbal battle just ended. He admired the boy—and when the youngster grinned like that there was something very likable about him. Also, Haskins was greatly surprised and intrigued. He could not reconcile this young volcano with the quiet youth who had heretofore made an interview as colorless. Jove, it held plenty of color now!

"Sit down," he said thoughtfully. "Bradley was speaking to me a few days ago about Walton's job. We haven't filled it yet, you know. Been looking around. Do you think—"

A little later young Gage dropped into the chair beside Hope Strong and mopped his moist forehead with an immaculate handkerchief.

"I've had a rather strenuous time with the boss," he confessed. "I was insulted, I insulted him. I resigned, was reinstated and promoted; and it all happened in six minutes. Some speed, eh, for a slow one? Now," his voice grew serious, "will you dine with me tonight and go to the theater to celebrate? There are a million things I want to ask you about."

"Of course I'll go, and I congratulate you on your promotion. It's just too wonderful to have it come so soon." Hope was radiant. "But I don't have to answer all the million questions tonight, do I?"

George Gage's answer was prompt. "Hardly. We've got all the rest of our lives together to talk things over in." He assured the lady, with his illuminating boyish grin.

Was Czar's Family Murdered? Proof of Deaths Is Defective

Jewel Found in Mine Shaft Could Not Have Been With Czarina—By Princess Catherine Radziwill

Anyone who is at all doubtful as to the truthfulness of the official report of the murder of Czar Nicholas and the members of his family as made to the world by the bolshevik government may find additional doubt cast on the whole story almost every week in some news dispatches or other. And these dispatches come from widely separated sources, most of them from sources whose accuracy has never been questioned, and each in some measure discounts the story told by the bolsheviks.

If, therefore, there is any good reason to doubt any part of the murder story, and these reports all furnish more or less good reasons, is it not plausible to assume that the story given out by the radical rulers of that chaos which is Russia was manufactured out of the whole cloth in the hope of deceiving the world for some reason which seemed to them good and sufficient for their purpose?

There are some recent dispatches to which I have not referred heretofore which are among the most interesting in this connection. Let me cite only one or two of these here. Not so long ago the Associated Press sent out this item from Geneva:

"The Gazette de Lausanne devotes three columns to statements of Russian nobles and officers, recently returned to Europe, who declare the czar and his family escaped disguised by way of Vladivostok to Japan, where they are now living peacefully. Their existence is being hidden for political reasons."

"The newspaper says it is curious that of the 10,000 inhabitants of Ekaterinburg not one saw the murder or burial of the royal family, while even bolshevik accounts of the tragedy lack confirmation. General Dogoskowski and an engineer named Natinov, who were at Ekaterinburg during the imprisonment of the imperial family, confirm other Russian reports of their escape."

Right on the heels of this report came a special cable message to American newspapers which pointed to the latest version of the persistent story that ex-Czar Nicholas and his family were not murdered by the bolsheviks, but succeeded in escaping and are in hiding for political reasons. Two notable refugees, Colonel Kolosov and Baron Malinov, who passed through Geneva and whose good faith is unquestioned, were quoted in this dispatch.

Colonel Kolosov, who came straight from Odessa, told the following strange tale:

"A certain Captain Stakiev, a prominent merchant of Viatka, enlisted in the red army. He belonged to the bolshevik garrison in Ekaterinburg and was won over to the monarchist cause. Captain Stakiev was in command of the guard at Villa Ipatieff, where the czar and his family were confined. On the eve of the day on which the execution was to take place Captain Stakiev plied his soldiers so freely with wine and vodka and corrupted them by bribes. At midnight, when he was sure the guards would offer no resistance, he conducted the czar and his family out of town to a place where horses were waiting."

"Here the fugitives first assumed elaborate disguises and then divided,

This photograph of Marie Feodorovna, mother of the last czar, shows her wearing the crown jewels, which were always carefully guarded even when in the possession of the empress. The diamond found in Siberia, said to have been in the hands of the czarina or one of her daughters, is identified as one of these stones, and it is here shown that they were locked up in the crown treasury at the time of the czar's abdication.

riding to different railroad stations on the Siberian railway, whence they reached Vladivostok without further incident and embarked immediately upon a steamship sailing for Japan. "A princess who is working as a Red Cross nurse in southern Russia informed me before my departure from Odessa that she saw the czarina and her daughter with her own eyes in Vladivostok embarking on a ship bound for Japan. The czar and czarvitch were not with them. The princess tried to approach the empress, but the crowd was too dense. She could not reach her."

Baron Malinov likewise was firmly convinced that Czar Nicholas was not killed at Ekaterinburg. He is an engineer and was living at Chelabinsk, ten miles from Ekaterinburg, at the time. He said:

"The plot was organized by a monarchist officer to save the imperial family and they succeeded in escaping to Siberia during the night of July 19, 1918.

"The next morning when the bolsheviks discovered the prisoners' flight, they conceived a vast mystification to cover their disfigurement. The local red paper, Isvestia, published a story stating that the czar and his family had been executed. An inscription, purporting to designate the room where the prisoners were shot, was affixed in the 'Villa Ipatieff. Several bodies of red guards who had died of typhus were burned and jewelry belonging to the imperial family was mixed with their charred remains and buried in the cellar."

"None of the numerous commissions which afterward came to Ekaterinburg—bolshevik commissions as well as commissions instituted by Kolchak and others—were ever able to establish the czar's assassination with certainty."

"I don't know where the czar is, but he is alive. Some say he is living quietly in China under an assumed name and under the protection of the British authorities. Others declare he is in Japan in a little town in the mountains."

Serge Persky, a well-known Russian writer living in Switzerland, was quoted as saying he does not believe the czar and czarvitch are alive, but considers it not improbable that the czarina and her daughters were saved. "In spite of the imperial family's sufferings," said Persky, "the Romanoffs still excite so much political hatred that it would be dangerous, even today, to divulge their place of refuge."

Last week I recalled other incidents which have been recounted to cast doubt on the fact of the murder. And presently I am going to cite other stories that have come to me—some from private but unimpeachable sources, others in the regular public news channels. But before going on to these I must fulfill my promise to show that at least one of the proofs advanced by the bolsheviks of the death and destruction of the bodies of the imperial family was pure fabrication and manufactured on the spot to serve its purpose.

That relates to the finding of one of the crown jewels near the abandoned mine shaft in which the bodies of the czarina and her daughters are alleged to have been destroyed. Although I am able to offer this proof from my own personal knowledge and from private information, the facts are particularly significant in view of the statement of Baron Malinov, quoted above, that jewelry belonging to the imperial family was buried in the cellar of their prison by the bolsheviks with charred bones of dead soldiers.

One of the evidences offered by the bolsheviks which was supposed to furnish irrefutable proof that the imperial family had perished was the finding of a large diamond alleged to have been identified as the property of the empress and which was discovered at the bottom of the famous mine shaft with the charred bones and some pieces of clothing of the czarina. This diamond was photographed and the pictures published in this country.

Now, I have seen the imperial crown jewels and also many of the empress' personal gems, and I found no difficulty, upon seeing the photograph of dicted by Jean Lasies, formerly a member of the French chamber of deputies, who contends that the Chateau Ipatieff contained no cells, and that Prince Lvoff's prison in Ekaterinburg was about four miles away from the chateau, where the czar and his family were held as prisoners.

The Russian officer who was sent by Admiral Kolchak to investigate the supposed assassinations, was a very famous necklace of the great Catherine was as a whole, but each stone separately, sold in Paris, London and New York. Others declared that the gems were in a bank in Moscow, whither they were conveyed when the capital was moved. But their real fate has so far not been surely determined.

At all events, the Empress Alexandra Feodorovna could not have had any of the stones of this celebrated neck ornament, and the Red authorities not only could, but undoubtedly did, have them in their possession. Therefore, we can reach only one logical conclusion as to who placed the diamond where it was found in the mine shaft!

But why the bolsheviks sought thus to manufacture evidence of the death of the czarina and her daughters is a question which I shall not attempt to answer. One is forced to ask why, when it is apparent that it would have been easy and far more convincing to have produced the dead bodies of the royal family.

And this bit of evidence, so palpably manufactured by the Red Guards, is only one of the many original stories about the assassination which have been refuted in a more or less convincing manner. In fact, almost every report about the death of the czar has been followed by equally convincing reports which contradicted the first. The accounts of the murder as advanced with official sanction vary so much that one may reasonably cast it out upon all of them. I have repeatedly pointed out the fact that no eye-witness to the actual assassination have ever been brought forth to present convincing evidence. I have quoted, from public as well as private sources, numerous authorities who have doubted the whole story of the emperor's assassination.

One of the discrepancies in the accounts of the alleged killing has been forced upon us in a similar way. I have had personal assurance from the Princess Paley, the widow of the Grand Duke Paul, that she was told in detail by one whose word she cannot doubt that Nicholas II, together with his wife and children, were shot outside of Ekaterinburg and their bodies thrown into a swamp. But over against this statement is the equally positive and oft-published one of Prince Lvoff that the czar and his family were beaten to death in the Chateau Ipatieff, in Ekaterinburg, and that the prince was taken from an adjoining cell and shown the room where the czar was killed. And even Prince Lvoff's story has been contradicted by Jean Lasies, formerly a member of the French chamber of deputies, who contends that the Chateau Ipatieff contained no cells, and that Prince Lvoff's prison in Ekaterinburg was about four miles away from the chateau, where the czar and his family were held as prisoners.

The room which was shown to him as the scene of the frightful deed was a small apartment in which hardly five or six people could be huddled together. The imperial family were seven, their attendants five and the Red Guards who were supposed to have killed them were said to have been twenty in number. Thirty-two persons could not have found place in this small closet—for thus it was described by the investigator. A few dark stains on the walls were the only evidence remaining of what was described as terrible butchery with revolvers and bayonets. He came to the conclusion that these stains might easily have been the remains of vermin which infest almost every Russian house in that part of the world.

He was convinced that the bodies could not have been carried away from the Chateau Ipatieff, without some one noticing. The stairs through which they must have been carried out are narrow and steep, with room for only one man to climb. It would have been necessary to make repeated journeys to get the victims into an automobile. In this latitude the summer nights are exceedingly short and light, and a Russian town or village is generally astir during most of the dark hours; in fact, there is more moving about then than during the heat of the day, when the natives sleep most of the time. Passants from the surrounding country and distant hamlets are in the habit of bringing their wares to market during the midnight hours. Surely somebody would have remarked the comings and goings in this place where it was well known that the former czar was confined.

Although the official bolshevik records say that the Romanoffs were killed at midnight and their bodies removed by automobile immediately, according to information on file in the French foreign office, which was given by Mr. Pichon to the chamber of deputies, some members of the imperial family were bayoneted during the day of July 18, while on the following day the Red soldiers returned and shot the remaining prisoners.

It must be remembered that the Russian, especially in the lower classes, is very imaginative. He likes to embellish everything he hears, and the oftener he repeats it the more he himself believes that the narrative is true as he has concocted it. It was but natural that the fate of the czar should be the subject of wonderful tales, rehearsed by the peasantry, which would only add to the puzzling features presented. Therefore, it is more than passing strange that the fantastic and gruesome stories which have come to us were utterly unknown in Ekaterinburg at the time of the catastrophe and the officer whom I have quoted as one of the first investigators of the occurrence failed to get any one in the town to tell him anything more positive than the one fact that on the 18th of July, 1919, two automobiles drove up to the Chateau Ipatieff, remained at its gates for a short time, not more than twenty minutes, then drove off, after which no one heard or saw anything more of the Romanoffs. More than one person asserted that they had seen these automobiles, but even in this rumor-loving community there was no one whose curiosity had led him to a knowledge of a great tragedy being enacted.

The report made by the British commission headed by General Knox, the former military attaché of the embassy, which made exhaustive investigations, reached the conclusion that the bodies had been thrown into the mine shaft, where their charred remains were afterward discovered. It is to be remarked that the investigations of this commission were favored by the bolsheviks, who almost led its members to the shaft where the Romanoffs were supposed to have found their last resting place. The remains which were found were really only fragments of bones, not even one skeleton being discovered to account for the bodies and furnish possible identification. This fact cannot be explained away by the report that a powerful acid had consumed the bodies, since portions of the clothing the victims wore were found in a more or less presentable condition, so that they were recognized as having belonged to the unfortunate members of the imperial family. Unless this clothing was placed there after the bodies were consumed, most surely it would also have been reduced to dust even before the bodies themselves!

And one cannot accept the commission's report that the Romanoffs were murdered all together, since the bodies of some members of the dynasty, those of the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, sister of the czarina, and five of her cousins were found in another mine pit, where identification presented no difficulty, though they were also reported to have been destroyed by hand grenades and died.

Added to the recent developments which point to so many contradictions is the fact that the Princess Dolgoroukoff, the wife of the man who refused to leave the czar when he was imprisoned and accompanied him to Siberia and who was reported to have been slain with other prisoners, recently received a short note from her husband saying that he was alive and well in a little Yakut village near the Arctic Circle in Siberia. While the note added that everything was going on well, no mention was made of the imperial family. The letter had evidently been brought by messenger to another Siberian town, where it had been posted, and she has been able to learn nothing more beyond the fact that her husband was not slain.

About the same time the relatives of the Countess Hendrikoff, lady in waiting to the empress, also received a letter which contained neither date nor place, asking them not to worry on her account, because she was alive and in good health. The countess had been definitely reported killed with twenty-two wounds after she had defended herself against the red murderers with a pillow on the fatal July 18.

If these two people escaped, how did they do when their companions were ruthlessly murdered?

Zinovief, one of the most influential members of the soviet government, speaking with a foreigner who happened to be in Petrograd a short time after the alleged murder, assured him that only the czar had been put to death and that his family were living in safety in a city in Siberia, the location of which he refused to disclose.

Now comes one of the most startling stories of all, one that came to me from private though unquestioned sources and which I must reserve for another chapter of this narrative. Suffice it to say here that it is the story of a girl whose undying loyalty to the czar is said to have enabled her to be the instrument for saving the life of the young czarvitch.

Child Welfare Was Discussed At Convention

Mrs. Ira Crouch Wood, of Chicago, director of the Elizabeth McCormick memorial fund, presided at the luncheon session of the biennial.

She declared that 80 per cent of some children are physically defective. Mrs. Wood said that these defects were not necessarily applicable to the child as a whole, but that a part of the causes for malnutrition could be directly traced to actual poverty.

"You wouldn't imagine," she said, "that compel the same painstaking examination of our children as those prevalent in the horse breeders' circles. You wouldn't imagine an experienced horseman examining a horse to find its defects without first having a veterinarian examine it. I have known a discussion to take place whether a physician should spend his time examining a child or a lame child, and that without removing the child's clothing."

Wood illustrated her discourse throughout with appropriate stereopticon slides, which showed the evolution of a child under the proper treatment.

Malnutrition was at the source of the majority of children's defects, she said. Physical defects, lack of home control, over-fatigue, faulty food habits, lack of exercise and of sleep.

The proper study of home economics, the most important part of which was the work of the mother, would remedy many of the defects in children and aid in developing a stronger and healthier race.

Many Topics Were Discussed

Dr. Robe said that since women were asking for equal political rights with the men, that they should be equal from every other standpoint

For a new co-operative movement with thirteen other women's organizations in a concerted effort for the better care of the community, by Dr. Lenna L. Meanes, chairman of the department on child hygiene. The subject was "The Child in the Home, School, and Community." The program included child, playgrounds and kindergarten work.

The method of remedying the shortage of public health nurses, which was so keenly felt during the influenza epidemic, was discussed by Dr. Meanes on tuberculosis by Mrs. K. R. Edholm. She said that it was the duty of every citizen to have a child in the home nursing, and that young girls should be encouraged to take up nurses' work.

NO OUTING CAN DECLARE INDEPENDENCE OF THE SWEATER!

Is It Hard to Believe This Orange-Braided Gray-Poplin Sweater?

SINCE the same Fourth has been in vogue, one's celebration of the day of the signing of the Declaration of Independence always includes an outing. Therefore, it is quite logical in thinking of the Fourth, that one think also of the sweater. For what outing can successfully declare itself independent of the sweater?

The season has brought forth such novelties in sweaters as the combination metal and silk weave one, the blouse one and the sweater suit.

Fancy weave silk sweaters can claim origination with other seasons, but a model like the fancy weave above is distinctly of the present season. A gold thread is combined with a peacock blue silk one, and the result is charmingly smart. A long roll collar, a rather wide belt which buttons in front, and very deep bell cuffs are made of peacock blue silk jersey.

When one looks to the plaid model the question at once arises, "Are you sweater or blouse?" And indeed since the vogue of the overblouse the point at which a blouse ceases to become a blouse and becomes a sweater might offer a suggestion for a debate in the school of fashion!

Whatever one's own conclusions about the model in question, its designer has labeled it a sweater and has achieved a singularly distinctive model in the creation thereof.

It is made of gray silk poplin and is braided in plaid-fashion with an orange silk braid. A gray suede belt and gray buttons constitute the only touches to rescue it from extreme severity.

The sweater suit bids fair to becoming an institution in Millady's wardrobe just as the sweater has. It is so very logical to wear a skirt of the same color as one's sweater, isn't it? And when one does that very thing, then one is indulging the sweater suit.

The model pictured here is of dark brown wool jersey. The skirt is knife pleated and the sweater is little more than a blouse with set-in sleeves. It closes down the back. A string girdle and some very colorful worsted flowers give it the jaunty air which the sportswoman desires.

But gold is not the only metal thread which lends itself to the weave of a sweater. Silver thread is equally charming when it happens to be used with a turquoise blue silk, for instance. The model with the cowl collar and string sash demonstrates the use of such a silk and metal combination and further proves that a fancy weave sweater can use plain weave side panels to distinctive advantage.
